To Owners and Drivers of Horses:

I wish to give my name in favor of a correct method of horse-shoeing. Horses suffer--they cannot tell us how much (the number of crippled ones seen daily, in our streets, demonstrates the fact beyond question)--and I am satisfied that the cause of their misery is traceable in a majority of cases to improper shoeing. The horse I am now driving, a year ago was nearly ruined by the "common method" shoeing --to-day his feet are in perfect condition and can go the stone road from end to end without flinching. Thanks to Mr. Edward Butler and the Goodenough Shoe and System.

WANTED HER HEART.

A Lady's Midnight Adventure With an Escaped Lunatic.

He is in Search of a Living Heart toD issect, and Must Have Hers—The Fellow Baffled by Remarkable Presence of Mind—He is Captured After a Terrible Struggle.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 19.—"White Place" is the untruthful name of a narrow court that runs down a hundred feet or more from the south side of Eighteenth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues. It is lined with tenements. On the first floor of the last tenement lives a hack driver, Timothy Buckley. The apartment consists of two rooms, the back room being the bed-room. Mr. Buckley's family consists of a wife and two little girls. They have been in the apartment only a few days. Mr. Buckley's occupation keeps him from home during the first part of the night. Mrs. Buckley is thirty years old. A neighbor said yesterday that she had had an adventure worth telling, and a reporter went to see Mrs. Buckley. She does not look like an imaginative woman, and she told this story: On Tuesday last she sat in her front room until 11:30 p. m., reading a newspaper. Her two children were asleep in a bed in the adjoining room, the sliding-doors standing open. Before preparing for bed by the side of her chair to pray. While still on her knees she heard a quick step on the pavement of the court and then in the hall. The door opened. As the step was like that of her husband she remained on her knees till her prayers were said, and then arose to her feet. Turning around she found that a stranger was in the room. The man was tall, had dark hair and a light mustache, and was decently dressed. He had a pleasant face. Bowing, he said:

SHE KNELT DOWN

"I have been looking for you fifteen years."

"Looking for me for fifteen years!" said Mrs. Buckley, in great surprise. "You have the advantage of me. I don't know you."

"Yes," he answered, "I've been looking for you all that time."

Thinking he might be some friend or relative of her own family, she invited him to sit down. He took a chair by the table. "Who are you, and what do you want?" Mrs. Buckley asked.

"I wanted to see you. You are the goddess of prayer, are you not?"

The question nearly frightened Mrs. Buckley into a faint, for she saw then that his eyes were unsteady, and that he was undoubtedly crazy. Thinking of the safety of her children and knowing if she screamed for help that none would be likely to reach her quickly at that hour, she controlled herself with an effort and answered slowly: "Yes, I am. Now what do you want?"

"I will tell you what I want. I am a surgeon, a French surgeon, educated at the University of Paris. For thirty years I have dissected the human body to learn of its wonders. For twenty years I have devoted myself especially to the heart. In all that time I have

DISSECTED ONLY DEAD HEARTS.

Now I desire a live one to dissect in order that I may see its pulsations. I knew that you would be here and that your health demanded that your heart be taken out and cleansed. That is why I came. Did you never hear of cleansing a heart while it was alive?"

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Buckley, "I know three doctors only a little way from here who tried, but they failed."

"Of course they did; I never fail."

"No, you will never fail; I am sure of that."

"Are you, really," he asked, brightening up.

"Oh, yes, I am perfectly sure of that." Then, fearing that he would see the children, or that they would attract his attention, she shrugged her shoulders, and, looking around, said: "How cold it is; don't you feel a draught? I think I'd better shut the doors."

"You must shut the doors at once," he said, "for your heart must be kept warm."

It was a great relief for her to see the doors safely closed, even though the outer door was closed at the same time. She walked back to the chair she had occupied, hoping only that her husband would come home. As she sat down, the doctor saw in a corner a skipping-rope belonging to one of the little girls. "Just the thing," he said, pointing to it. "I can tie you in the large arm-chair, perform the experiment, return the heart safely to its place, give you a dose of my elixir, and you will live forever. See."

He drew from various pockets half a dozen small knives and scalpels, each wrapped in tissue paper. They were slowly arranged, and handed to her one at a time, to show her that each was in "admirable condition for delicate work."

A KNIFE WAS PRODUCED

from an inner pocket and handed to her. It's edge was keen. "Now," he said, when she had looked at them, "I'll take the rope—"

"Hold on," she interrupted, "that will hurt; you will have to tie me very tight, because if I move it would spoil the operation, wouldn't it?" He nodded. "Those other doctors had a table when they tried it, and there were broad-straps to hold the patient down on it tight. I know where it is. Besides there's a neighbor of ours who is afflicted as I am; she lives just two doors down the street from the court; she's a particular friend of mine, and I'd like to have her operated on at the same time. If you'll go for that table we can call and get her on the way What do you say?" To her intense relief, the man readily assented. "It's cold out, isn't it?" she said. "Hadn't I better get a shawl?" She said this to keep him from thinking she only wanted to get him out of the house. He agreed, saying again that her heart must be kept warm. Throwing the shawl over her shoulders, she led the way to the street through the hall, to a saloon that was open, so that help could be obtained. They walked slowly up the street

TOWARD THE SALOON,

the Doctor frequently directing her to wrap herself well so that her heart should be kept warm. In passing one of the doorways Mrs. Buckley thought she detected in the shadow a man, but the shade was too dense for her to make sure, and so she did not dare to take the risk of screaming. Just as the two got beyond the doorway the Doctor asked her if her heart was still warm, and then Mrs. Buckley was shoved to one side, and three men grasped the Doctor from behind. They had sprung from the shadow of the doorway. A fierce struggle followed. Not a word was spoken the only sounds being the heavy breathing of the men and their prisoner, and the stamping of their feet on the paving of the street. After a time the Doctor was secured with handcuffs on his wrists and ankles. He was not wholly conquered then, but had to be carried to the end of the court. There one of the men gave a whistle and a close wagon like an ambulance drove up. He was lifted in and then the others got in it with him and drove away. "I hardly know what I said or did during the fight," said Mrs. Buckley to the reporter, "but I did faint. "After he was secured, one of the men said something about his being an

ESCAPED LUNATIC

and that I mustn't say anything about it. As they passed out into the street I think I recognized one of the men as a keeper at the Bloomingdale Asylum, but I am not positive about that."

"What made you think he was from Bloomingdale?"

"It was a man named McGee, if it was the man I think it was. His sister used to live with me and he came to see her. He was a north of Ireland man. It was he that told me not to say anything about it, and I thought I recognized his voice, too."

"Did you ever see him at the asylum?"

"No, I never was inside such a place in my life and I do not want to be, either. His sister told me he worked there. He has a brother there, too."

"Were there no letters or words painted on the ambulance?"

"If there were I was too badly frightened to see them. I have not slept a wink since then, and am almost dead."

"How do you suppose the lunatic found his way down the court to your place?"

"I don't know, sure, unless it was that I had a bright light burning and every other place being dark, as it was so late."

Timothy Buckley, the husband, said that he got home about three o'clock Wednesday morning and

FOUND HIS WIFE PROSTRATED,

by her fright. She had been unable to get back to the house for a time after the men carried away the Doctor. The rest of the night she neither slept nor let him sleep. The picture of the Doctor and his instrument, was constantly returning to her, and she started up in the greatest terror. At the Bloomingdale Asylum the reporter found the two McGees. They are brothers, and from the north of Ireland. James remembered calling on his sister when she lived with Mrs. Buckley, but said he had not recaptured a lunatic in Eighteenth street on Tuesday night, and manifested evident ignorance of the case. Other attendants who were questioned spoke in a like manner.

The Jere Dunn Verdict.

CHICAGO, May 19.—The verdict returned in the trial of Jere Dunn provokes savage comment in all the city papers this morning, and the alleged influences which acted on his acquittal are particularly condemned by two or three of the morning journals. They all give long accounts of the reception tendered Dunn by the sporting fraternity after he quitted the court room, a champagne supper being given to him at a resort known as the "Drum," which lasted very nearly through the entire night. Among those who grasped the hand of Dunn was a character known as "Stock Yard Johnnie," and Dunn, resenting the overtures, struck the man in the face. The incident is related to have put the crowd in high spirits. The leading counsel who had defended Dunn so successfully was noted among those present at the wine supper.

THE POPE'S LETTER.

Prominent Irishmen Give Their Views on the Subject.

Rev. Dr. Betts Talks About the Relations of Ireland, England and Rome--Other Citizens Interviewed on the Subject of Irish Agitation.

Irishmen in this city are much excited over the Papal letter, which, as it is alleged, denounces agitation, and calls upon the priests and bishops in Ireland to cease all connection with the Land Leagues and Parnell's movements. An address was put in circulation last night, addressed to Irishmen, and signed by Joseph O'Neil, Dr. Thos. O'Reilly, Dr. Robt. J. O'Reilly and Chas. Gallagher.

The address speaks in glowing terms of Parnell and his work, and calls on the friends of Ireland to stand by him, even against the Papal interference. Each of the gentlemen mentioned subscribed a sum of money to the Parnell redemption fund, and all sympathizers of the cause are called upon to do likewise. A cablegram was sent to Ireland yesterday. Dr. Thomas O'Reilly called at the POST-DISPATCH this morning and left the following copy, saying that there had been an error in the cablegram as published this morning:

To the Freeman's Journal, Dublin, Ireland:

Catholics generally discredit the Papal circular, and condemn unjustifiable interference with Irish politics on the part of Rome.

THOS. O'REILLY, M. D.

St. Louis, May 18, 1883.

A POST-DISPATCH reporter called upon a number of leading Irishmen this morning and talked with them in regard to the Papal circular.

REV. DR. BETTS,

the rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, was seen in his study. He said: "My impression is that the Papal allocution has not yet been seen here. As far as I know, we have only had extracts from it, and with these there may have been interpolations on the part of the newspapers which published them. I think that the Court of Rome is altogether too smart to denounce the present Irish agitation or to recommend absolute obedience on the part of the Irish to England, without leaving itself some hole to crawl out of in case of necessity. A general denunciation of what are called secret societies may have been construed into a denunciation of the present agitation, but, if that is the case, a very large body of Irish Nationalists will say: 'Let the galled jade wince; our withers are unwrung.'"

"You do not put much credit in the published statements of the contents of the Pope's message?"

"I think that it will probably be found that the letter of the Pope is directed against the violent measures of supposed secret societies, and that it does not say a word against lawful agitation. The fact may be that, through English advice and bad advice, the Pope may possibly have used language that he would gladly withdraw if he knew, as well as we do here, what a wonderful emancipation from the domination of the priesthood has come to the large body of Irishmen in this country on account of the circumstance of dwelling in sparsely settled places, and of looking to other sources than the church for secular education. The recollection of enforced ignorance in Ireland, with its consequent evils, has given the Irishman in this country a burning desire for education. If he can't get it through the church he will get it in some other way. And this may have the effect of inducing an Irishman to review the connection of Ireland with the See of Rome in the past, and of changing many opinions that he might have formed on the subject. The Court of Rome sees plainly the enormous power of England, commercial, military and naval. It has an ardent desire to bring England into the old and closer relations to itself. It would make many sacrifices for that purpose. And the Pope sees, probably, that, by the opening of Parliament to Jews, Romanists, Infidels and Heretics alike, divided counsels in the future, with the possible contingency of a Roman Catholic on the throne, might bring about a return of the old sway of Rome. If to accomplish that object the sacrifice of Ireland be necessary, it might be done by Rome. But it is also possible that Irishmen may yet teach Rome that there are 25,000,000 Irishmen to be affected, instead of 5,000,000."

"If the letter is as it is represented, what effect do you think it will have upon Irish agitation?"

"Irishmen are becoming more and more impatient with ecclesiastical rule. They have been so goaded by the charge that they are entirely controlled by their church, that they will nows carcely listen to a priest, even when he is advising them for their own good. The disposition is to follow a diametrically opposite course. The reason they love their church is that in the darkest days of their national history, the church stood by them. They have loved the church because the church loved Ireland. Patriotism is the Irishman's absorbing affection. When the church ceases to foster this sentiment, as an Irishman understands it, she will succeed in weakening her own influence with the Irish."

"You do not fear the effects of the circular?"

"My opinion is that it will be found to be the usual general denunciation of violent men and violent means. But there is the other possibility. England is a great power, and there is a probability of a Roman Catholic mounting the throne within fifty years. The allies of the Pope in Europe are all weak and some of them powerless. If he could succeed in regaining the assistance of England it would give him a great place in the councils of Europe. If an English Minister were again resident at the Court of Rome, the Pope knows of what avail it would be. It may have caused him to consider whether he should take the side of what he considers to be a decaying nation, or whether he should come out as a lover of peace, and aid in the suppression of agitation against Ireland. And the Court of Rome may have done the latter. If this will cause Irishmen to read up the connection of Ireland with Rome, to read the history of the relations of Henry II, and Adrian, it may change the whole relation of the Pope to Ireland. If it be true that Rome has gone so far as to denounce the present agitation, this will unite the Irish people more than anything that has been done for a long time, for the answer the Irish people will give to it will have the effect of showing the Ulster men of the north that any fears they may have entertained of an abridgement of their religious liberty in the event of Home Rule, are groundless.

JOSEPH O'NEIL

said: "My feelings about the matter are expressed in the address published to-day to which my name is signed. The letter, as reported to us, is a piece of unwarrantable interference on the part of Rome."

"Will it retard the movement?"

"No, sir; not in my opinion. The Irish people have sufficient sense to separate politics from religion. They know full well that the Pope, when he speaks ex cathedra, is infallible. But they also know, as does everybody else that has read history, that on other than religious subjects Popes have made the most egregious blunders, and that it is possible they may do so again. Some of the newspapers cast their sneers at us on the subject of infallability, but we know what that means, and we are aware how far the Pope has a right to dictate." This interference, if it has taken place, will strengthen the movement, because it will bring the Protestants and Catholics together on the same ground."

DR. P. S. O'REILLY

said: "Politics and religion are two separate teings. This agitation has done more for Ireland than anything since the days of O'Connell. People can love God and love their country too. You will find that the Irish will not be turned from their cause even by a Papal letter. I never knew that to be a good Catholic it was necessary to bow down before the unjust oppression of English landlords. The Pope is an Italian. If he were an Irishman, he would never have issued that allocution."

MR. M. H. PHELAN,

of the Western Watchman, said, "Nobody has seen the text of the letter yet, and therefore it is idle to discuss it or its effects. The wise way is to wait until we see a copy of it. I am sure that when it arrives its contents will be found to be such that the most pronounced Nationalist will agree with its statements. You must remember that the synopsis we have had of it has all come from and through the English sources. Something must be done, of course, to stop this assassination. But I will venture to say that Pope Leo has never denounced lawful, peaceful agitation."

A number of

were called upon, but they were found unwilling to discuss the subject.

TAX-PAYERS!

PROPERTY-PURCHASERS!

Those Who Seek Investments in Real Estate,

And the public generally who have at heart the interests of the city, who have long waited for a READY REAL ESTATE market at fair prices, just as stocks and bonds are quoted and sell readily at given prices, should at once acquaint themselves with the new plan upon which the GRAND AUCTION SALE of real estate will be conducted Monday, at the Real Estate Exchange. Should the public make this sale a success the result will be a new era for the handling of real estate in St. Louis. The result will be that any given property can be put up at the Exchange and the owner or owners can realize in ten days the market prices. What a blessing this would be to property-holders, business men and capitalists, who often wish to convert their property into money quickly, but who under the present system are often compelled to expose and offer their property before the market for years without finding a buyer. What an impetus the success of the new auction plan would give real estate sales.

How quickly would the thousands and millions of idle capital now hoarded in banks and safe deposit companies begging for takers at 4, 5 and 6 per cent, find its way into good paying real estate. How an active real estate market in St. Louis would revive all kinds of business; All we have to do is to establish the fact that there is a ready market for real estate at its market value.

The office of FISHER & CO., 714 Chestnut street, and the Real Estate Exchange will be kept open till 9 p. m. to-night, to give information and supply all with catalogues, giving plan, terms, plats and accurate description of all the property ($200,000 worth) to be disposed of Monday to the highest bidder.

CARONDELET JOTTINGS.

Half a million bushels of grain is now stored in the elevator.

A common drunkard in the Police Court this morning was fined $3.

A colored male floater was caught last night near the foot of Haven street.

Wm. Pratt is now figuring at Jefferson City relative to a situation, not as convict, but as salesman at the penitentiary.

The storm in this part of the city began about ten o'clock and lasted for several hours. The rain fell in torrents. Heavy thunder, and almost one continuous flash of lightning, were accompaniments of the storm.

Carondelet not being included in the jurisdiction of city lodges, Jupiter Lodge, Knights of Honor, at the meeting last night declined to appoint a committee to confer with city lodges relative to the celebration next month.

Jupiter Lodge, K. of H., last night declined to allow Mr. Powell to pay for the fifteen gallons of ice cream provided for the members, and a warrant for $14 50 was therefore ordered. Members not present, it is said, will "kick" against the general fund being used in this way, but the regular attendants have decided to have good times in the future among themselves.

DOTTED WITH DEATH.

The Trail of the Terrible Tornado Last Night.

The Wind Wreaks Its Vengeance on Persons and Property--Twenty-Five Lives Lost at Racine--Numerous Persons Killed in Illinois--Great Damage to Property--Scenes of Desolation.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 19.—The storm of wind which blew over this section of country all day yesterday culminated at ten o'clock last night in a terrific cyclone. Its course was to the east a little north of Rochester, and it did not come nearer to Springfield than the Wabash and Alton Junction, two miles south. It wrecked a number of houses at the Junction, and badly injured the inmates. The large brick house of Mrs. English, near the Junction, was blown down, and Mrs. English was dangerously hurt. The house of Mr. Willfong, near the English mansion, was leveled to the ground, and it is thought the whole family perished. The house of Benjamin MacVeigh, about three miles southeast of the city, was damaged, and Mr. MacVeigh, Jr., had his arm broken and sustained internal injuries. The house of Mr. VanNorstrand, 200 yards distant from the MacVeigh dwelling, was destroyed, and it is believed that Henry Van Norstrand, a young man, twenty years of age, was killed. In the course of the storm, trees were torn out by the roots and fences and outbuildings scattered in every direction.

Racine's Desolation.

MILWAUKEE, May 19.—A Racine dispatch says: The sun rose bright this morning on the scene of desolation left in the tornado track. As yet the list of the dead is not accurate, but it is safe to estimate that sixteen lives were lost in and about Racine. Men are at work clearing away the debris, and women, clad in borrowed clothing, are hurrying about with tear-stained eyes bemoaning the loss of their homes and relatives and friends, and steps are already being taken to relieve those in immediate want, and Mayor Fish has issued a manifesto calling on the citizens for contributions, to be left at the office of the City Treasurer. A special meeting of the Council was held at 10 a. m. and action taken toward caring for the dead and maimed and penniless. The suffering is confined to the very northern outskirts of the city.

Among the laborers and mechanics, who owned their little property, which was completely swept away, as near as can be learned by a careful survey of the ground, the losses are as follows: Andrew Fereon, one and one-half story frame dwelling completely demolished and household goods scattered to the winds; loss $1,500. Michael Doherty, small frame house and contents wrecked; loss $500. Wm. Lut, saloon and dwelling of two stories blown from foundation; loss $1,800. John Petura's brick dwelling, in which were fourteen people, was reduced to a huge pile of ruins, and not one of the inmates was injured more than slightly. Two adjoining frame buildings belonging to Petura were wrecked; total loss, $3,800.

Three houses in Shinn Hollow, near Grafton, were totally wrecked. They belonged to Denny Shay, John McVeigh and Mike Garner. The furniture in each of them was destroyed and washed into the river. Mrs. Garner was killed and her husband is missing. He is supposed to have been thrown into the ravine and killed, and his dead body washed into the river. Mike Garner had a hip dislocated, and a daughter of Denny Shay had a leg broken. The storm was also severe at Edwardsville. In St Louis.

The rain storm which burst upon the city at ten minutes to eleven o'clock last night was, for its duration, very fierce, the rainfall between 10:52 a. m. and 11:07 p. m. being 1 11-100 inches. The rain certainly came down in blinding sheets. On the brilliantly lighted streets near the theaters it was absolutely impossible to see the houses on the opposite side for fully five minutes. The downpour was attended by incessant lightning and appalling thunder. Hardly had the deluge abated its fierceness when Boreas came to the front and gave an exhibition of his power that brought thoughts of the late disastrous cyclones to the minds of many. Through the kindness of Mr. Bert Kribben the POST-DISPATCH is enabled to give the following scientific details:

In Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 19.—The cyclone which struck this (Sangamon) county near this city last night carried devastation to property and considerable injury to persons in its track. The cyclone appears to have formed, so far as this county is concerned, about two miles and a half directly south of the western portion of the city, striking first a small house occupied by John Foster, and completely demolishing it. The family were absent. It next struck Elijah J. Iles' house, one mile east of Foster's, destroying the house and one of the finest barns in the county, both brick; damage, $6,000. The house was occupied by a family named Frother. A baby three months old was badly injured. The next place struck was the English place, across the road from Iles'. A fine residence and grounds, owned and occupied by Mrs. Turnley English, a relative by marriage of Hon. William H. English, of Indianapolis, Ind. This house, barn and all out-buildings and fences were leveled with the ground. Mrs. English was badly hurt, her hips being crushed by the falling buildings. Her sons escaped unhurt. "There was a roar, a flash, and all was over," said Mrs. English to the reporter, "and I was left beneath the ruins." It is doubtful whether she will recover. Damage to property at the English place about $8,000. From the English place the storm appears to have made a jump, next striking the Logan house, demolishing it. No great damage was done. Then it went through the woods, the funnel coming down with fearful force at the settlement of Round Prairie. Here the destruction was great. The houses of Wm. Cantrall, Mrs. Frederick Van Nostrand, Samuel Ashton, James Frother, George Ray, Henry Turley, Henry Trabee and a portion of Samuel Grubbs' being destroyed. Wm. Van Nostrand was fatally injured, and

DIED THIS MORNING.

His head was crushed by falling timbers. Mrs. Jane Van Nostrand had a shoulder broken. Her sister, Maggie's thigh was badly broken. A younger sister's hand was injured. Henry Hulett, an inmate of the house, had his back badly hurt. Mrs. Trotter, her sons, Philemon and George, and daughters, Ettie and Libbie, were slightly hurt. Mr. Roy's baby, aged eighteen months, was badly hurt. Henry Frabee was crushed through the chest, arms and shoulders, and died within a short time. The storm passed northeast through the county into Logan county, destroying houses and injuring persons, how many is not known at present. Thos. Chandler's house, a mile and a half northwest of Buffalo, was torn to pieces and burned. Mrs. Chandler's arm was broken and her breast badly bruised, from the effects of which she died. Her child, about one week old, was found near her, both being blown about five rods. The child had a nail-hole in its head and will die. Mrs. Grimes' house, near Chandler's, was blown down. She was badly bruised. Her son's arm was broken. Further on, near the end of Logan county, Bronson Lannam's house was blown down and his daughter Annie's skull was fractured. Between twenty and thirty farm-houses and barns in Sangamon county, between this city and Logan county on the north-east, are demolished. The bridge over the south fork of Sangamon River was blown over. It is impossible at present to estimate accurately the damage in dollars and cents, but it is roughly put at between $100,000 and $200,000, and is more likely to be above the latter figure, counting orchards, fences, stock and damage to crops.

At Edwardsville, Ill.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

EDWARDSVILLE, ILL., May 19.—A terrible cyclone passed through this city and country last night about 12 o'clock, doing great damage. The weather for some days had been threatening, but was exceptionally cool and dry, and crops have suffered much. Yesterday morning, however, it became terribly sultry, and early in the evening heavy rains fell. The main track of the cyclone passed just southeast of the city running in a northwesterly direction, and the properties of William Omola, G. W. Kender, Henry Bollman, the Oak Hill Refinery, the residences of N. Barnett, I. A. Davis and numbers farther north were either entirely demolished or badly wrecked. The large dairy stable of Mr. Kender was also wrecked and a great portion of his stock badly crippled. The large two-story building of Mr. Barnett was a total loss, together with its entire contents, and his daughter, Mrs. Masey, who was visiting him, was instantly killed, and her little son seriously injured. Fatalities were also reported from Alhambra and Olive townships, several occurring in one family. In this city the large court-house was struck on the south gable, and the roof entire almost blown away. Pouring rain drenched the entire upper story, used as a court-room, and the plastering and costly frescoing are a total loss. The court had just adjourned last evening over to Monday, and a hung jury was occupying one of the rooms at the time, but fortunately none were injured. The large business houses of J. S. Frares, W. S. Prickett and W. E. Wheeler were also unroofed. The loss of the large sugar refinery, Oak Hill, is a very serious one. It had just been remodeled last season, and its proprietors, Messrs. Schwarz, of this city, and Belcher, of St. Louis, had been very successful in their experiments, only last week having received a check from the Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington for $1,200, for services rendered the Government in that line last year. The total damage in this city and vicinity will not fall short of $18,000 or $20,000.

Jonesburg.

KANSAS CITY May 19.—A brief dispatch from Moberly, Mo., says that a tornado visited Jonesburg, a small town about forty miles southeast of there, at 10 o'clock last night, blowing down several houses and destroying property in the county adjoining. One woman was killed by the falling of a farm-house.

The Markets.

FORENOON SESSION.

There was but little change in the situation, bears continued to hold the upper hand, and during the morning hours prices were hammered down considerably. Trading was light but little disposition shown in that respect. Corn was no better there being less trading and a continued decline. Oats were dull as usual and weak, with but little change in values, however.

CATTLE—As is usual on this day, there was but little stock of any description on sale. Fresh arrivals being unusually light and nothing of any consequence left over from yesterday, buyers also were free. The largest purchasers both on Eastern and local account having withdrawn entirely until next week, and there being none present except small speculators and scalpers, who purchase only occasionally and then in small lots, trade was merely nominal. The feeling quiet and values steady at quotations.

HOGS—Like cattle, there was but little on sale, and were very quickly disposed of at the top figures current yesterday. Shippers were in the market but they had but few orders, and they appeared perfectly indifferent about taking hold, although some few transactions were made to them later in the day. The movement, however, was principally on scalpers' and speculators' account. Quotations show no qualified or decided change, some lots selling at concessions, but this was done so as not to carry them over Sunday. The range of prices was about as follows: Light to good Yorkers $7@7 15; mixed to good packing $7@7 20; rough mixed $6 80@7; butchers to extra $7 25@7 45; skips and culls $6 25@6 75.

SIXTEEN PAGES.

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1883.

The Fabian policy of the Mayor up to date is not a success.

The opinion of Irish Catholics is that the Pope is infallible, but that he has been misinformed.

The book fight in the public schools has to be fought sooner or later, and this is as good a time for it as any.

If Wiggins had been in St. Louis yesterday and had predicted a storm, his reputation would be greater than it is now.

The morning papers have discovered that a school book fight is imminent. The readers of the Post-Dispatch knew it a week ago.

The celebrated poem of Robert Browning called "The Ring and the Book," does not relate the story of the publishers' ring and the fight over the text book.

The Mayor is attempting to introduce his new city government after the manner of the badgers at the Fair Grounds when introducing their persons into their holes—small end first.

There is a city ordinance which makes it a misdemeanor for a sign to fall in the streets, but there were numerous violations of the ordinance last night. None of the signs were taken up by the police, as usual.

The olive branch of peace which we tendered in vain to the Mayor now lies shrunk and withered behind our sanctum door, and already grim-visaged war has carried off one assessor. The situation is evidently one in which there is no use crying peace, for there is no peace.

Senator Logan explains that his son-in-law, Tucker, saw that certain interested parties were manœuvring to obtain the Zuni's springs for themselves, and he baffled them by filing a claim for himself. He saw the handkerchief hanging out of the gentleman's pocket, and took it away, for fear some evil-minded person should steal it.

The opinion of the ex-State Superintendent of Public Schools, R. D. Shannon, as published in the Republican this morning, agrees with the opinion which the Post-Dispatch expressed upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the Roach case. This is that the decision touches only the constitutional State school funds, and does not refer to the appropriations of local taxation.

During the absence from the city of the musical editor of the Globe-Democrat the base-ball editor was sent to the Thomas Concert, and in criticising the piano playing of Mrs. Rive-King he skillfully evaded the difficulties of his novel position by saying: "The piano playing of Mme. Rive-King was remarkable in that it was entirely from memory, no note whatever being before her during the entire performance." We believe that this remarkable performance is frequently equaled by comparatively obscure pianists.

There are two chuck-holes in the alleged Nicholson pavement in front of the Grand Opera-house which might have been filled up at the start at a cost of five dollars, but they have been allowed to widen and deepen for three months, and meantime ten thousand vehicles have been bumped and jolted and racked by them. But nobody in the City Hall seems to know of their existence nor expects to know, until some one is thrown from his wagon-seat and killed. Then, when the city has a five thousand dollar damage suit, it will send a man and a cart around and dump a cart-load of macadam in the holes.

General Crook is a wily old Indian fighter, the best in the service, and great confidence is felt in his ability to take care of himself and his command. But with a very small force he is following the Apaches into the unknown mountain and desert fastnesses of Sonora, which they have hitherto held against Mexican armies much more formidable than Crook's. The records of our Indian warfare tell many a tale of small detachments sent forth under such circumstances to be surrounded and massacred by an overwhelming force of Indians. If Crook should meet with Custer's fate, it will be only another illustration of those piddling methods which have compelled so many brave officers to lead forlorn hopes to almost certain death, when we could easily have crushed the foe with a mere fraction of the army we keep posted at the various social centers, where soldiers are of no earthly use except to grace the ball-room.

The cable informs us that the English holders of the Mexican debt have agreed to accept new bonds for half the face of the debt at six per cent interest, and to make an additional loan of $20,000,000 at nine per cent. This English debt was contracted in 1850, or rather a number of old debts were lumped together and an additional amount of money borrowed, enough to make $50,000,000, on which the Mexican Government promised to pay interest at the rate of three per cent. It paid one coupon and then got tired, and has paid no interest since, but has never questioned the validity of the debt, and, with interest, the debt now amounts to some $105,000,000, at which amount it is placed in all the Treasury reports. If Mexico proposes to pay six per cent on half this amount and nine per cent on $20,000,000 this means an addition to the present expenses of nearly $5,000,000 per annum, and as the revenue is insufficient to meet the present expenditures, it is hard to believe that the interest will be paid for more than a year or two. The Mexican finances are getting into a muddle which can not fail to cause uneasiness among those who have cherished high hopes of the Republic.

THE WOMAN'S SIDE.

St. Louis, Mo., May 18.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I noticed in your paper that the public, as well as the jury, acquitted "Little Phil. Thompson." It was considered that he was only defending his home and honor, and I say "bravo." But if a wife knows that her home and happiness is invaded, that some other woman is filling that place with her husband that, according to the laws of God and man, should be the wife's only, has she not the same right to shoot down the destroyer of her happiness as Phil Thompson? This great evil is making sad havoc in many once happy homes. Wives who would lay down life to promote the welfare and advancement of their husbands are subjected to this gross insult and injury. Please give us your views, as we know you always defend the right.

The Post-Dispatch did not acquit little Phil Thompson, nor did it say "bravo" to that maudlin public sentiment in Harrodsburg and elsewhere, which sought to screen a cowardly denial of justice behind the pretense that lawlessness protected the sanctity of home. On this question the Post-Dispatch has taken the only position consistent with civilization and order.

But the same reasons which compel us to condemn the act of Phil Thompson, and to condemn the public sentiment which acquitted him, lead us irresistibly to condemn, with equal positiveness, the supposition that an injured wife should be permitted to take in her hands the illegal redress which the Thompson verdict awards to the husband.

Our view of the matter is simply this: Marriage is a contract of which the very essence is mutual affection and voluntary consent. When these disappear, their place cannot be supplied by the pistol, and a society which says that the only safeguard of the sanctity of marriage is the right of private murder, is still in a state of abject and hopeless barbarism, as far as the marriage relation is concerned. If the husband is not man enough to keep his wife as he won her, his failure as a husband does not give him right of life and death over her. If the wife cannot keep the affections of her husband, she must stand the loss, but she must not expect the sun and moon to stand still and the world to go back into the ages of barbarism to permit her to wreak her vengeance on society merely because her married life has been a failure.

In other words, the husband is neither the slave nor chattel of the wife, nor is the wife the slave or chattel of the husband, and marriage gives no one an authority over the life or welfare of others, save in accordance with law.

THE NEW YORK PRESS.

Current Editorial Comment of the Metropolitan Journals.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, May 19.—The Sun says: "Mr. Conkling wore a dark business suit, with a small piece of red ribbon in the left lapel of his coat, the significance of which excited some discussion." The above statement, referring to a trial in which the Senator took part as counsel, appeared in our law report the other day. In this country it is common for young men to wear ribbons which their lady loves have given them. But Mr. Conkling is no longer a young man. The red ribbon is possibly the badge of one of the orders of nobility which would have been founded under Grant and the empire, if the clock of time had not been put back ten years at the Chicago Convention.

THE TIMES.

The Times says: "It is hardly to be believed that we can get through another Presidential canvass without a division of the political forces on the issue of the commercial policy of the nation. It is a question on which the sentiment of the people is divided, but the line of cleavage runs athwart the party lines. There will be efforts to prevent the split from coming, but the people cannot remain divided into two political parties which do not correspond with the division of sentiment that exists among them on the chief political issue of the time. The position is a strained one which can hardly be held through another Presidential struggle.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Can you inform me where or in what book I can find the piece of poetry entitled "The Dying Alchemist?" By answering the above you will greatly oblige a Subscriber.

In Justice to Miller.

St. Louis, May 19.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I saw in your columns of yesterday an account of the amateur performance at the Pickwick Tuesday night, in which you said that "Mr. John Miller was the drag of the company." Now, in regard to this I have only to say that it is very unkind in any paper to speak so of any gentleman who came to this city in a busy time, and, being a lawyer, could ill afford to spare the time to play, and as for he being the "drag of the company," I think you are mistaken, for he did excellently, considering the difficulties of the play.

Respectfully,

One Who Saw the Play.

Why is This?

St. Louis, May 19, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Will you be so kind as to inform me through your valuable paper who are the proper parties to whom to report a nuisance. I have reported the water that has been running in the alley between Easton avenue and Bell street, between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth streets. I have reported it to the Police Board of Health, but they do not seem to care. Now, please answer through your paper. Who can I report this to so it will be attended to? There is a continual flow of water, day and night, and as black as ink.

East Bell Street.

Real Estate Frauds.

St. Louis, May 18.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

There are men—well, excuse me—frauds, buying property around in different parts of the city and paying a small amount of money down; when you go to have the property closed up they tell you there is no time mentioned to close it up and they expect you to hold the property until they are ready. Such men ought to be arrested on the vag. They bought some property along the line of the railroad between Grand avenue and Forest Park, but the people would have nothing to do with them.

Please publish this item and put others on their guard to watch these men. Yours,

C. D. Cushman.

Some Easy Ones.

Newport Ark., May 18, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Is Canada a part of North America, and is a man born there an American citizen? Please answer through your columns in Saturday evening's issue. Also, is a man from Denmark (a Dane), a Bohemian? Respectfully, Newport.

[1. Canada is a part of North America. 2. The expression "American citizen" is usually meant to imply a citizen of the United States, and in that sense a Canadian is not an American citizen. #3. A Dane is not a Bohemian. Good-by. 501 off!—Ed. P.-D.]

Extradition.

St. Louis, May 17, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Herewith I request you, in order to decide a dispute, to state with which European countries the United States are in cartel, and whether people having transgressed the civil, law, i. e. contractors of debts, bankrupts, etc., are subjected to delivery? Excuse the trouble I put you to, and oblige me by satisfying the above request.

A Constant Reader.

[The United States have extradition treaties with nearly all the civilized powers of the world, such as Great Britain, France, Austria, the German Empire, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Switzerland, Mexico, etc., but these treaties only cover criminal offenses, such as murder, piracy, robbery, arson, rape, forgery, embezzlement, etc.—Ed. P.-D.]

The Jury Fraud.

St. Louis, April 18, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

As your valuable paper has the reputation of being a public censor, and is justly entitled to such merit in this age of excesses, I would briefly call your attention to a public evil that has come under my notice, and of which I have been the involuntary victim. Instance: An individual occasionally represents himself clothed with official authority, calls at a private house and demands to know all about your private domestic affairs, on the pretense of being authorized to make up a jury panel or some other thin excuse, intrudes himself impudently into your private residence and scares the inmates, the ladies generally, as the goodman is always down town at his business. At my residence yesterday my family had just such an experience, and I report it as one of the many instances of this kind I have experienced in the last few years' residence here. I think a shotgun is the best remedy, unless in your wise judgment you can suggest some other method to correct this growing evil. Yours,

J. E. McRae.

Amateur Numismatics.

Shelbyville, Ill., May 18, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I have a copper coin, one side of which bears the inscription "Compositions-Spielmarke," with an eagle and one star. The other bears the word "Sp. Marke," eleven stars and a liberty-cap. Will you please tell me what kind of a coin it is and what is its value? Yours, Phœnix.

[We regret to say that there is no one in the Post-Dispatch office who can give any information as to the origin or value of the coin described. The name "Spielmarke" would seem to indicate a German origin, and up to very recent times there were quite a number of obscure German principalities which exercised the right of coinage, and probably coined spielmarks, but the eleven stars and the liberty-cap render it improbable that the coin was minted outside of the United States. At any rate it is a coin not known to editors. It might be worth while to inquire of the nearest church deacon, as a great many strange coins are taken up in collection boxes, and the deacon would be likely to know this coin at sight.—Ed. P.-D.]

The Case of Most.

St. Louis, Mo., May 18, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In your edition of Thursday you say that Gov. Seymour and Gen. Grant have suggested legislation against persons who, in this country, conspire to murder or alarm rulers in the United Kingdom. You say that the fact is England has never undertaken to punish the enemies of any country but her own. In this you are in error, for not long since she sentenced a "Herr" to prison for inciting in London to murder the Emperor of Germany. A Naturalized American.

[Herr Most was convicted under an old statute against blasphemous publications—a statute made to restrict the freedom of the press, and under which he could have been punished for the words he published, though they had no reference to the Emperor of Germany or any other prince or potentate. It was found, when Italy was complaining of Mazzini's operations in England, and when France complained of the murderous operations of Orsini and Simon Bernard against the Emperor of France, that no English statute could reach and punish them, after they had been arraigned and the fact proved in England. When the strong and popular Palmerston Ministry proposed a new law for the punishment and repression of such acts and conspiracies, the Ministry was hurled from power by the opposition it thus aroused.—Ed. P.-D.]

Injustice to Mexico.

St. Louis, Mo., May 19, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In an editorial article entitled "Our Slow Neighbors," published in your issue of yesterday, there are several errors which, if not corrected, would reflect unjustly on the Mexican Government. You refer to a telegram to the effect that, during the quarantine season, all mails for Mexico must be sent by New York, and you state that there is no other arrangement by which mails, goods or passengers can reach the City of Mexico. You also, unjustly, infer that it is Mexico that has established a quarantine against the United States: that a citizen of Monterey or Chihuahua who wishes to repair to the Mexican capital has no shorter way than to cross the United States to New York, "cross the ocean" to Vera Cruz, and make a journey of 5,000 miles to reach a point 500 miles away. You also assert that "not a finger has been lifted in Mexico to anticipate the completion of the railroad by starting a pony express or a stage line," that "the Government still charges twenty-five cents internal postage for a single letter, and that, with the exception of the railroad subsidies, Mexico stands where she did when the boom commenced."

Now, Mr. Editor, all this is unjust. Were it not for the financial aid that the Mexican Government has extended for twelve years or more to a couple of American S. S. lines, there would not be, in all probability, any regular communication between the Atlantic and Gulf and Pacific seaports of the United States and those of Mexico. The guarantee you speak of was established by New Orleans against Mexico, Mexican business men, as well as those in the Mississippi Valley who are interested in the Mexican trade, have, time and again, protested against the questionable wisdom of practically sealing the Gulf ports of this valley to Spanish-American trade during six months of each year. It is the Post-office Department at Washington that has issued the order that mails for Mexico—meaning the exchange offices that are reached by the Atlantic sea route—must be sent via New York. Far from there being no other arrangements for the transportation of the mails, merchandise and passengers to the city of Mexico as you state, there are, and always have been, regular stage lines running between the terminus of the Mexican Central and Mexican National Railroads from Saltillo to San Luis Potosi and Lagos, and from Santo Rosalia to Zacatecas, Aguascalientes and other points within easy reach of the railroads already running thence to the City of Mexico.

So that there is no necessity for such a detour of the continent, as you state, unless the traveler may wish to "cross the ocean" by coasting along the United States to Vera Cruz.

Postage for a single rate (½ oz.) letter in Mexico is only ten cents, and the rate of postage to nearly all foreign countries, within the Postal Union, is only six.

As to the assertion that Mexico has made no headway, with the exception of the granting of railroad subsidies, it is sufficiently refuted by every unprejudiced and intelligent traveler that has visited the country within the past few years.

It is manifestly unfair to compare Mexico to the United States in matters of material progress, inasmuch as the former has enjoyed only about seven years of uninterrupted peace during the sixty-two years of her political life as an independent nation, while in this respect the United States has had a half century more of freedom from the tutelage of the mother country.

Yours respectfully, John F. Cahill.

Randall.

From the New York World.

We are opposed to Mr. Randall's election because his associations are of a questionable character. He has always been elected through the friendly services of the worst of the Philadelphia political rings, and his supporters have full confidence in his fidelity to their interests. He cannot be true to this ring and faithful to the honest portion of his constituency at the same time. He cannot represent the worst elements of a local government and be in sympathy with the practical reform demanded by the people.

We oppose Mr. Randall's election because he is not in accord with the Democracy in its opposition to the encroachments of corporate monopolies. It is unquestionably true that there is a monopolistic wing of the Democratic party. It is equally true that its principles and objects are offensive to the great mass of the party. Mr. Randall's interests are identified with the monopolies of his own State, and his sentiments are friendly to them rather than to the people. He is not of a sufficiently strong character to impart the confidence that he would not, perhaps unwittingly, use his official position in favor of the monopolies he upholds if there should come a conflict between their interests and those of the people.

Gov. Crittenden's Song.

From the St. Louis Spectator.

Gov. Crittenden has just had published, by Balmer & Weber, a little song entitled "My Child," he, himself, being the author of the words. The music is by Milton Wellings. The Governor happened to write the words in this wise: Some time since, while listening to Miss Carrie Hanson, of Paris, Ky., sing Welling's song entitled "Some Day," he wrote some affectionate lines on the fly-leaf of a book, in memory of his only daughter—a pretty little child of whom he was deprived by death some months ago. Miss Hanson immediately sung the words to the melody of "Some Day," with which they are now published. Only one hundred copies of the song are printed, and they are to be distributed among the personal friends of Gov. and Mrs. Crittenden.

Other Wethers Wrung.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

It is New Orleans' turn to laugh. When Butler took treason by the throat in that city and held it until its tongue and eyes stuck out and its face grew purple, Republican Massachusetts was proud of her Ben and hailed him as the Cromwellian chief of her loyal Ironsides. Now that he has driven the Republican ring of the old Bay Commonwealth to the wall and is holding it there by the windpipe, the organs of the party that sounded his praises twenty years ago cry out against him as if he were in league with fiends of darkness to pillage the temple and exterminate the saints.

Something Wrong.

A Time of Trial.

The time approacheth apace when the $8-a-week clerk, passing an ice-cream saloon with his girl on his arm, will spread himself on the deleterious effects of glucose in ice-cream and the number of girls he knows that have ruined their teeth by drinking soda-water with two much marble-dust and carbonic acid in it.

From the Columbia Spectator.

At the bank: Cashier—"Excuse me, madam, but your account is rather overdrawn." Mrs. Maltravers (whose husband is off on business and has left her a check-book)—"Oh, Mr. Cashier! that can't be possible; I've got lots of checks left yet."

Another Set-Back.

From the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

It is disturbing to know that Badeau cannot draw two salaries, and the fact that he has left the army without intending to do so is truly distressing. The country will probably roll back on its hinges several hundred years.

Envy.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS.

But Deacon Bicycle Doesn't Think It Can Quiet a Woman's Tongue.

"I don't know much about music," said Deacon Bicycle this morning, "and that is probably why I felt a little uneasy in the Armory Hall last night at the Thomas concert. I couldn't tell B flat from a bull's foot if I was called on to make a swap for either of 'em, and I believe a man might come up to me with a fiddle and persuade me that it was a trombone or bass drum or tambourine in a minute, but the girls wanted to go and I took them, although, to tell you the truth, there ain't one of them understands much more about the thing than just enough to enable her to distinguish between a bar of melody and a bar of soap. I took them and they said they enjoyed it. I saw the way they enjoyed it. They had opera-glasses, and, after looking long and earnestly about everybody in their neighborhood, set to work discussing this one's hat and that one's bonnet, Miss So-and So's dress and somebody else's gloves, doing this in such a rapturous and excited way that I thought a bald-headed gentleman who had evidently come to listen to the music and who looked at them every now and then would like to paste a porous plaster across the mouth of each. I felt a little bit annoyed myself more than once and particularly when the band was playing loud and a little fellow was knocking the life out of a drum. I wanted to listen to that drummer real bad, but the chatter-boxes kept up the circus about millinery and other mincing stuff, and my fun for the night was spoiled. Every time the musicians turned themselves loose on a piece of work and seemed to be trying to blow the roof off to let the rain in, those terrible girls interfered with the effect by throwing their chin-music into the other side of the scales and overbalancing the achievements of the regular ear-splitters of the occasion. They picked to pieces every last dress and piece of head-gear within range of their eyesight, and then began to make unpleasantly funny remarks about other things. They giggled and carried on like youngsters at a candy pulling, while I sat alongside and endured the whole business, music, chatter and all, and when they came away they said they enjoyed it. I'll bet a good five-cent cigar there were plenty of other females in the assemblage who enjoyed it in the same way. Folks who don't know a fugue from the back of a yellow dog's neck or an allegro from a ten-cent breast-pin, go to concerts because it is fashionable, and, not having the ability to appreciate the music, they lay themselves to prevent everybody else from doing so. A brace of talking women can do more to excite the wrath of a concert audience than all the libretto peddlers and opera-glass hawkers in the world. A forty-dollar seat isn't worth five cents if it happens to be in their neighborhood, and three hundred musicians with a full head of steam on couldn't drown them out in a six months' contest. As I said before, I don't understand music, especially music that's away up in the high-art realms, but the result last night would have been the same had the band played "Yankee-Doodle" or "Come Back to Erin." I couldn't have enjoyed it, for the chattering girls I had taken along. I move, for the benefit of suffering connoisseurs, that hereafter females who attend musical events that cost money be gagged on entering the hall, and remain gagged during the entire performance. Married men, of course, are not expected to vote upon this question."

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Retail Prices of Sundry Supplies that Cheer the Inner Man.

The Sunday marketers were out in force at Union Market this morning, and the stands were well laden with the "delicacies of the season." Considerable fear was felt by the vegetable dealers that the heavy storm last night would beat down the strawberry crop and make the supply "sandy." The supply of strawberries is large and increasing, and the prices as follows: Home berries, two quarts for 25 cents; Monarch, 25 cents, and the finest Kentucky berries, 30 to 35 cents. The supply from the adjacent country will arrive during the coming week, and probably send the price per gallon down to 50 cents. The vegetable prices were as follows: Asparagus, 10, 12½ and 20 cents per bunch; squashes, 5 and 10 cents each; Southern peas, 60 cents per peck; cucumbers, 5 and 10 cents each; new potatoes, 45 and 50 cents per peck.

At the poultry stands the demand and supply were out of joint. Old chickens, dressed, sold for 40 cents, while spring chickens are scarce and bringing 50 and 60 cents.

The butchers' prices, which have been at a stand-still for some weeks, were as follows: Lambs from 50 cents to $1 50 per quarter; pork, 12½ cents per pound; shoulder of veal, 12½ and 15 cents for choice qualities; roasts 15c; chops 20 and 25 cents per pound. The prices for butter at the market ranged as follows: Best dairy, 25 cents; best creamery, which is selling at many up-town stores for 35 cents, was sold for 30. Eggs have gone up for some reason to the dealers unknown, and the prospect is that if the small supply continues they will be selling at 25 cents in a week.

The fish-stands were almost empty in consequence of the recent storms. Shad sold for 60 and 75 cents each. Even buffalo and cat were scarce, but choice fish were to be had at 15 cents a pound.

Why She Loved Him.

BY THE POST-DISPATCH POET.

"Irma!" he called. She turned her head,
Tossing its gold,
Like a sun-wave rolled
Down the back of her neck, and said:
"What is it, Mike?"
He pulled his mustache, bristling and red,
While his underlip hung like a lump of lead;
Then he spake: "Pray, Irma, why do you like
Your Mike?"

She turned upon him her lustrous eyes,
From a face an angel himself would prize;
Then hid in the folds of her golden hair,
And artfully veiled her beauty there,
For Irma O'Shaughnessy's manner was rare.

"Is it," cried Michael MacGregor McCann,
"Because I'm considered a handsome man?"
"No," she sobbed,
While Mike's heart throbbed.

"Is it," he asked, "because fortune has smiled Upon Mike as her own dear, darling child?"
"No," she replied,
While Michael sighed.

"Is it because," said this lover true,
"I supply you with plenty of gum to chew?"
"No," she gasped,
As her hand he clasped.

"Then, why!" he shrieked, "Oh, why do you love
Your Mike, and call him your turtle dove?"

Up from the depths of her golden hair
Irma raised her face so fair;
The light of her soul filled the skies of her eyes,
She smiled like a wagon-load of pies,
And, drawing Mike near,
To chew his ear,
She uttered these words between her sighs:

"Oh, Mikey, dear, I love you not Because both beauty and wealth you've got;
Nor yet because whenever you come
You bring me a dime's worth of chewing-gum.
My love for you
Has nothing to do
With the taffied realms of Nyum-I-Nyum;
I love you simply for your du-
Plex elliptic, broken-in-two,
Three-cornered base ball thumb."

VULCAN BOND CASE.

Trial Delayed—Rush of New Suits for the June Term.

There was another hitch in the arrangements for the trial of the Peck-Chouteau Vulcan bond case this morning in Judge Lubke's court. All the witnesses were on hand, including Daniel R. Garrison, for whom an alias summons had issued. The court referring to the case said that it was the last day of the week, and the jury yet remained in attendance for trial of cases on the week's docket not disposed of. They took precedence of the Peck-Chouteau case, which was an equity proceeding, and would probably engage the court's attention for several days. It would, therefore, be convenient if counsel would agree on a special setting of the case for some day at the close of the month, say the 31st inst.; that would give three clear days for the trial, as the June term would not commence until the first Monday of the month.

Counsel consulted and it then appeared that a difficulty was presented in the prospective absence of a material witness, Oliver Garrison, who would leave the city in a few days. Counsel preferred to take the chance of the court hearing the case on Monday, if other cases should be disposed of meanwhile. Accordingly the witnesses were directed to be on hand again on Monday morning. It is scarcely probable, however, that the trial will be reached before the 31st inst.

The trial of a ten-thousand-dollar damage suit, Julius Dunckmann against the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railroad Company in the feature of the day's proceedings in Circuit Court No. 2. The plaintiff was employed in driving a coal wagon. He is represented by A. R. Taylor, and states that he was engaged on the track near Harrison street loading coal from a car when it was struck by another car being started at the time by a locomotive in the yards. The plaintiff's back was turned to the engine and he did not see the danger. The force of the concussion sent him to the ground and he sustained injuries, including a crushed arm. Joseph M. Dickson appears for the company.

RUSH FOR THE JUNE TERM.

There is the usual activity to-day in the office of the Circuit Clerk, where attorneys rush at the eleventh hour to file new cases for the June term. Nearly 400 suits appeared on record at noon. The list closes at five o'clock. The following were the entries of the morning:

Mary C. Driggs vs. Supreme Lodge of the Order of Mutual Protection; suit for $3,505, balance of benefit fund.

Samuel H. Buck, et al., vs. Charles A. Spalding, et al.; suit on debt, $4,775.

George Grabbe, et al. vs. James A. Chambers; suit to quiet title.

A PRIVATE DETECTIVE

Who Pays for the Privilege of Ferreting Out Crime.

Harry B. Hickok, a young man of decidedly rustic appearance was arrested to-day for representing himself as an officer. On examination it was ascertained that he had paid an association in Chicago for the privilege of carrying a star and commission which entitle him to no privileges whatever. He was armed with a huge revolver, which, however, lacked a trigger, and he, consequently, could not be prosecuted for carrying a concealed weapon. After questioning him, Chief Campbell came to the conclusion that there was no offense in Hickok carrying a revolver and making a fool of himself, and ordered his release.

The Thomas Concert.

The first of the series of Thomas Concerts was given in Armory Hall last evening with the following programme:

1. Symphony—"Eroica," (a) allegro con molto, (b) marcia funebre, adagio assai, (c) scherzo, allegro vivace: (d) finale, allegro molto, Beethoven; orchestra.
2. Song—"Am Meer," Schubert; Mr. Franz Remmertz.
3. "Siegfried's Death," Gotterdammerung, Wagner; orchestra.
4. Concerto No. 1 in E flat, Liszt; Mme. Rive-King.
5. Scena and Prayer, "Der Freischutz," Weber; Mrs. Humphrey Allen.
6. Serenade No. 3 in D minor, op. 69, Volckmann; (violoncello obligato by Mr. Adolph Hartdegen); string orchestra.
7. Ballet music (Nero) I.—Chorus and ballet. II.—Ballet divertissement. (a) Dance of the Warriors. (b) Dance of the Bacchantes. (c) Ensemble dance of the Bacchants, jugglers, warriors, Rubinstein; orchestra.

It has been so long since such a band as that of Thomas—really without a rival—has been in St. Louis, that its coming was anticipated with great pleasure. An audience so large as that of last night, assembled under external conditions so unfavorable, was proof enough of this fact. But the result was evidently to the major part of the audience disappointing; not, indeed, in the superb quality of the orchestra, its unity and precision, its body and tunefulness, its exquisite shading and finish, showing rare musical intelligence and masterful leadership; but in the programme itself, which was heavy and sombre almost to lugubriousness. Much of it could be played in a Puritan church without disturbing the mournful meditations of the brethren. Theodore Thomas is justly regarded as a wonderful maker of programmes, but he must have had an unaccustomed fit of the "blues" when he made this one. The first and last numbers of the "Heroic Symphony" of Beethoven are intricate and unmeaning to anybody but a musician. The second is a funeral march. The third—allegro vivace—with its dainty and graceful movement barely relieves the work, before an average audience, from heaviness throughout. The next piece was Schubert's "Am Meer" ("By the Sea"), beautiful indeed, but full of tenderly mournful cadences. Following this came "Siegfried's Death," in Wagner's descriptive methods, weird and sad. The piano concerto did very little as a foil to the preceding heaviness. Following this was the prayer from "Der Freischutz," and then a serenade in B minor, full of tender feeling. The ballet music of Rubinstein, with which the concert concluded, is intended to describe something or suggest something; but, while very good as music, it requires a vivid imagination to connect it in any manner with the graceful movements of a dance, and does very little to brighten an otherwise heavy programme. It may be very unlearned to write in this way of the performances of an orchestra that is conceded to be incomparable; but we believe three-fourths of last night's audience will indorse the foregoing paragraphs.

Franz Remmertz, always a great favorite in St. Louis, appeared to be in good voice, and that is saying enough. His broad, burly, musical bass is captivating, even though it lack somewhat the refinement of tone and method that might be demanded of a more delicate organ. Mrs. Humphrey Allen is passably good, certainly not a great vocalist or artiste. There is more than one soprano in St. Louis who can sing the "Freischutz" selection with equal intelligence and better quality of tone. The marvelous accompaniment by the orchestra would have carried the number acceptably without any singing at all. Mme. Rive-King, always a favorite here, as everywhere, was heard to great disadvantage on account of the roar of the storm then prevailing, by which much of the fine work in which she excels was obscured. From the combination of causes referred to there was an almost total lack of enthusiasm. Rarely has any concert given in this city, musically so meritorious, been so coldly received—a fact that is easily accounted for if our view herein expressed be correct. Financially, the series is proving a great success, nearly all the seats being sold for to-night, and a large audience assured for to-morrow afternoon.

This evening we are to have Gounod's "Redemption," with soloists and orchestra and the chorus of the St. Louis Choral Society. To-morrow's programme the ladies will all pronounce "just lovely."

A REMARKABLE CIRCUMSTANCE.

A Lady that Suffered Increasing Agony for Eight Years Fully Recovered.

A Ten-Year-Old Boy that was Paralyzed Restored to Usefulness—Cross-Eyes that Were Made Perfectly Straight—The Removal of a Tumor.

Local interest continues to center upon the wonderful cures that are daily being performed by Dr. S. B. Hartman at the Lindell Hotel. The following are among the cures effected by the Doctor during last week. Two weeks ago the physician announced that he would remain only four weeks longer, as that would allow all the afflicted within an area of 300 miles of St. Louis to be treated by him. The announcement has had the effect of bringing patients in large crowds, and the last two weeks have been the busiest that he has experienced. The remaining two weeks will be sufficient to treat as many more, as no person needs to be treated but once.

Mrs. Joseph Christian, of 1124 North Twenty-fifth street, St. Louis, has been a constant sufferer for eight weary years. To her the time seemed like ages, for she never knew a moment's rest from pain. Even at night she found no relief, as she suffered then as badly as in day time with the most excruciating pain in the head, caused by chronic catarrh. She had been treated during these eight years by thirty-two of the best physicians in the city, which included all the leading ones. Among them she paid $1,500 without obtaining a particle of relief. It is almost impossible to properly conceive the unrelenting pain that she has endured. So great have been her sufferings that she frequently went into a swoon and continued wholly unconscious for twenty-four hours at a time. No two of the physicians that have treated her have agreed exactly as to the cause of her trouble. Only one of them pronounced it neuralgia of the brain, caused by chronic catarrh, and he told her that "chronic catarrh was incurable." At the advice of physicians she has visited Canada twice during her eight years of misery, in hopes that the change of air might bring her some relief, but she returned each time unimproved in her condition. She finally consulted Dr. Hartman, at the Lindell, who pronounced neuralgia, caused by chronic catarrh, her ailment. She went under his care and was treated for catarrh. She is now entirely relieved. The pain does not return to her even for a moment, and she is in excellent health. Her happiness knows no bounds and she is like a person born again.

The ten-year-old daughter of Christian Ludwig, of No. 1502 Carondelet avenue, St. Louis, was paralyzed and unable to walk for a long time. In this condition she was perfectly helpless. A month ago Dr. Hartman fitted her with ingeniously constructed appliances, with scientific bearings. After using them two weeks the little girl was enabled to stand and walk a few steps by steadying herself by a chair or table. Now she can easily walk without any support. In a short time she will be able to run and romp about with her playmates as merrily as any of them.

The ten-year-old daughter of J. G. Pope, of Coin, Greene county, Ill., has been nearly totally deaf for about a year, which was caused by chronic catarrh. When the child went under Dr. Hartman's treatment, March 15 last, she could only hear a watch tick an inch from her right ear and eight inches from her left ear. Even at this close proximity the ticking could not be heard distinctly. On the 10th of May the child had so greatly improved under Dr. Hartman that she was able to hear the watch tick twenty-one inches from her right ear and twenty inches from her left.

The eleven-year-old daughter of Mrs. R. J. Bockhoff, 1607 Monroe street, was a victim of cross-eyes. Although they were very crooked, Dr. Hartman, with little difficulty, straightened them by the use of glasses.

W. M. Bergman, of 2448 Market street, had his good looks marred by a pair of cross-eyes. Less than a minute's operation upon them by Dr. Hartman made them perfectly straight.

Stephen Campbell, 3229 Sarah street, was also unfortunate enough to possess crooked eyes. They were straightened in about half a minute by Dr. Hartman.

E. H. Hinton, of the United States Engineer's office at St. Charles, Mo., had eyes considerably crossed. They were straightened by Dr. Hartman before Mr. Hinton had time to realize that he was undergoing an operation.

Chas. Edelmann, of 2708 Carondelet avenue, was another owner of crooked eyes. Under the influence of Dr. Hartman's treatment they soon became perfectly straight.

Chas. Opie, of Ironton, Mo., had a pair of very crooked eyes straightened by Hartman in less time than it takes to tell it.

Mrs. Joseph Apprederis, of 1448 Broadway, had a tumor behind her ear, which was removed by Dr. Hartman in less than half a minute.

Dr. Hartman will positively leave the Lindell Hotel on the evening of June 2.

THE MILLERS' EXCURSION.

A Pleasant Trip Down the River—An Annual Event.

The steamer City of St. Louis, with Capt. Dan Able in command, swung loose from the wharf boat at the foot of Market street, at 9:30 o'clock having on board fully nine hundred people, the occasion being the sixth annual excursion of the millers and flour merchants. The cabin of the steamer for this occasion has been handsomely decorated, under the direction of the Executive Committee, with flowering plants, swinging vines and exotics. Three bands of music, one on the hurricane deck, one in the grand salon and one on the model barge lashed alongside, furnish music for those inclined to enjoy the dance. Refreshments are provided in abundance on every deck, lemonade for the ladies in the cabin and beer for the boys on the boiler deck. Every guest of the millers wears a boutonniere, presented upon arrival on the boat. The clerk's office presents a bewildering scene of beauty, having been converted into a perfect bank of flowers. There are beautiful baskets of cut flowers for the chairmen of committees and the officers of the boat, and a triumph of the florist's art is a full-rigged ship to be presented to Capt. James A. Scudder. The gallery to the right of the cabin, the starboard side a mariner would say, is reserved for refreshment tables. A thousand camp chairs are provided for the excursionists. Dancing was commenced on the barge and in the main cabin shortly after leaving the city, and before Carondelet was reached, where a large party was taken aboard. The face of nearly every prominent merchant in the city was to be seen in the crowd, the Entertainment Committee has provided a band of jubilee singers, who, on the hurricane deck, entertain with the melodies of the South those who prefer the river breeze and the panorama of the shores to the exhilaration of the dance. About twenty-five members of the State Millers' Association are on board as invited guests. The comfort of guests is looked after by the Reception Committee, of which James Post is chairman, their entertainment by William Kaut's committee, the management of the dancing floor by Ed. Beckman, Jr., and assistants, the music by L. C. A. Koenig and associates, the refreshments by W. F. Chamberlain and fellow-committeemen; T. Hattersley's committee, arranged for the transportation. Commodore Lyndon A. Smith is on board. The boat will go down the river to Orange Grove, or Harlow's Landing, as it is called on the maps, and after a brief run amidst the trees the excursionists will return some time this evening.

Y. M. C. A.

The story of Herod and Peter, Acts 12:1-17, will form the subject of the teachers' Bible study at the Y. M. C. A. this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. Rev. D. C. Wright will lead the gospel song service at 8 o'clock. The religious exercises at the Y. M. C. A. for to-morrow will include the Chinese and Central Union Sunday schools at 2:45 p. m., a gospel meeting at 4:30 for young men only, and a general preaching service in the evening at 8 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Brookes will give a Bible study on the Golden Altar of Incense at the Y. M. C. A. in his Tabernacle series for young men only, at the Y. M. C. A. on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. The International Y. M. C. A. Convention at Milwaukee will adjourn to-morrow night. The attendance has been unusually large. C. L. Colby, Esq., president of the Wisconsin Central Railroad, is president of the convention. The Y. M. C. A. are taking steps to actively push the railroad work on this side of the river. It is proposed in their plans to have such rooms as can accommodate with a suitable meeting-place the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and to otherwise accommodate railroad interests. Mr. W. H. Roberts, an active worker in the Y. M. C. A., left last night to engage in mission work for the Congregational Church near Memphis, in this State.

HOW TO DRESS WAVES.—Lay the waves on a board covered with white muslin, pinning the waves securely to the muslin. Commencing at the ends, comb carefully all the snarls until it is all combed through. Then wet the waves thoroughly—I mean very wet—with the comb, and you will see the wave creep back in its first position. By shoving the sides toward the center you will be able to make very deep close waves. You can make as many curls across the forehead as you may wish by simply taking a strand of the front hair and turning it around your finger, letting it lay flat upon the board, as the water makes it lie flat in any position you may desire. Then wipe all the water up by putting a towel over it; it absorbs all the surplus water. Let it lay over night to dry. Then comb out with a comb if a fluffy appearance is desired.
Yours, respectfully,
MME. A. M. DUMAS, s74 Parisian Hair Store, 614 Olive street.

THE IRON HORSE.

Mr. C. B. Kinnan Retires as A. G. P. A. of the Gould System—News Notes.

Mr. N. R. Warwick, commercial agent consolidated systems at Cincinnati, is in town to-day.

The reports of the Vandalia show that yesterday the main line hauled 285 through and 1,292 local passengers. The local passengers hauled by the T. H. & L. Division were 913 in number. Although a very fine showing, Col. Hill says it is hardly up to the average, and that all winter the average was fully as large.

Mr. T. H. Tramp, of The Hague, Holland, is in the city on his return from an extended tour of the narrow gauge interests of the West, especially the Denver and Rio Grande systems. Mr. Tramp is largely interested in the railway securities of this company, and his trip is in the interests of a heavy syndicate of Holland bond-holders.

An order has been issued from the innermost castle of the consolidated systems, announcing that hereafter no employe of the systems can get a pass to any point off the division on which he is employed. He can obtain a reduced rate ticket, but passes in such profusion are no more. Another order that is agitating the boys is the one prohibiting the use of tobacco by any of the clerks while in the building at work. Nothing loud has been said yet, but it is easily seen that an undercurrent of dissatisfaction exists.

At the meeting of the St. Louis committee held at Commissioner Fink's office Mas 16, at which the Commissioner decided that the Wabash, I. & St. L. and O. & M. had been guilty of short billing and would have to turn into the pool a total of 40,000 tons of freight, it was resolved that hereafter all grain shipped from St. Louis or East St. Louis, whether billed to a pool pont or not, it must be reported to the pool agent at once. Then only that destined to pooling points would be charged up to the pool. This was done so that all grain shipments can be kept trace of, and the "short billing" fiends rapped on the head at the next trial thereof.

The hauling of regular weekly refrigerator cars is being made a specialty by the C., B. & Q. These cars are of the latest improved refrigerator patterns, are iced and otherwise appointed before starting out on trips, and are pushed through on fast freight time. Within the last ten days a weekly car from Chicago to St. Louis for the transportation of butter, eggs and cheese, and one between Milwaukee and St. Louis, have put on, and only yesterday another car between Burlington and St. Louis was started out. The routes over which these cars are sent run through the finest dairy regions of the West, and this addition of facilities in the transportation of dairy products will be an item of no little interest to St. Louis.

The trip of inspection of the St. Louis and Cairo Railroad was made by the Illinois Railroad Commissioners yesterday. The party consisting of the Commissioners and Supt. Chas. Hamilton and G. F. A. Smith, of the road, left East St. Louis in a special train of two coaches yesterday morning at 8:25 o'clock, and the trip to Cairo, 152 miles distant, was made by 3:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, including stops along the road of at least two hours. The return trip was made in much slower time, Superintendent Hamilton on the down trip having fully demonstrated that a narrow gauge engine can run forty miles an hour without any difficulty. The Commissioners expressed themselves as very much surprised at the excellent condition of the road and its appointments, and well satisfied with the management. The road has been under its present management only since January, 1881, but in that time has been greatly improved and is now not only self-supporting, but a dividend-paying enterprise.

As announced in these columns several days ago, a joint agent to represent the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Railway, better known as the Louisville and St. Louis Air Line, and Leve & Alden, the well-known tourist and excursion managers, has been appointed in this city. Chas. B. Kinnan, who has occupied the position of assistant general passenger agent of the Missouri Pacific, and after the lease of the Wabash by the Iron Mountain assistant general passenger agent of the consolidated Gould systems, has been appointed as general Western passenger agent of the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Railway and general agent of Leve & Alden. His office will be at No. 114 North Fourth street, the office formerly occupied by the Hannibal and St. Joseph, a lease of which has been obtained for five years. Mr. H. A. Callan, general manager of Leve & Alden, has been in the city for several days, arranging for the establishment of an office here, but the appointment of the agent was not made known until this morning. Mr. Kinnan's appointment takes effect June first, the abolishment of the office of assistant general passenger agent of the consolidated systems dating from that time. Mr. Kinman is so well and favorably known, not only in the railroad circles of this city, but all over the country through which his connection as assistant general passenger agent of the Missour Pacific Railroad took him, that little need be said concerning him. He is one of the youngest brightest and most promising railroaders in the West, and his career has been particularly brilliant. He has come up from the ranks, having earned all by sheer force of ability and hard work, and the present appointment requiring as it does a wide range of experience as well as ability, is a deserved compliment to him. The withdrawal of Mr. Kinnan from the consolidated systems, brought about by the abolition of the office of assistant general passenger agent, is regretted by all concerned, but all are pleased that he is to remain in the city and still be connected with St. Louis interests.

The Great Barnum Show.

The Barnum and London shows will open at the corner of Twentieth and Olive streets, Monday afternoon, and give a series of exhibitions during the week, two performances being given daily. Barnum's name, known the world over, is always taken as guarantee of a first-class show, and the reputation earned years ago, of always being in advance in his line, still clings to him and gives force and character to the promise made that he now has the greatest show on earth. A street parade will be made Monday morning. Jumbo, the monster elephant from the Zoological Gardens, London, is the great feature of the show, and there are twenty-nine pachyderms, thirty-two camels and some Nubian dromedaries. Three rings will be employed to display the features that belong there, and a hippodrome for chariot and other races. Three tents cover the exhibition area, and everything is complete and convenient for the accommodation of thousands of patrons.

The Municipal Assembly.

In the Council last evening Mr. Stone presented a bill, with a petition from the Fair Association, for vacating certain streets west of the Fair Grounds, between Grand and Kossuth avenues. The Association proposes to lease the property for extension of the grounds. The uniform meat-shop license measure, $75, was ordered to engrossment. The nomination of A. L. Bergfeld as Assessor for the Third District was rejected by a vote of 9 to 4, Messrs. Cummings, Devoy, Haines, Parker, Stone, Straub, Temple, Vastine and Zelle voting nay on confirmation of the favorable report of Messrs. Scudder and Rowse.

In the House Mr. Fox moved a reconsideration of the police telephone bill, ordered at the last session to engrossment. He wanted to strike out the clause which excluded dramshops from connection with the system. Mr. McManus wanted all reference to houses of ill-fame stricken out. A discussion ensued and the opinion was expressed that houses of ill-fame and saloons would abuse the system. Mr. Cornelius moved to strike out all reference to those houses and to saloons in the bill. It was defeated by a vote of 14 to 13. The amendment connecting dramshops with the system was then adopted by a vote of 14 to 13, and the bill went to engrossment. Houses of ill-fame are thus excluded from the benefits of the system. Mr. Richardson introduced a bill for the construction of cisterns for the Fire Department in needed localities. A resolution was introduced by the same Delegate providing for appointment of a joint committee of conference with the City Counselor for framing a street sprinkling measure. Mr. Richardson likewise introduced a resolution for appointment of a committee to confer with the Board of Public Improvements, for creating a system of boulevards. The asphaltum blocks on Locust street between Leffingwell and Ewing evenues are getting uneven, and a resolution was adopted for a coating of Trinedad asphaltum. A vote of thanks was agreed to be tendered John F. Cahill for his efforts in establishing the Mexican and Spanish-American Exchange. The general appropriation bill was laid over till next Tuesday. The bill reported omits the $3,800 appropriation for removing the fences around the Court-house and appropriates $3,000 for improvements at the Female Hospital. The appropriation for repairs of stone and wood block paving is reduced from $10,000 to $5,000 and for macadam and other material from $140,000 to $130,000. The appropriation for Lafayette Park is increased from $5,000 to $6,500.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Engineer Killed and Fireman Fatally Injured—Disaster on the I. & St. L.

The Indianapolis and St. Louis train leaving here last night met with a very serious accident about 10 o'clock when nearing Hillsboro, Ill., 65 miles from St. Louis. But a short distance this side of Hillsboro the road crosses a small stream on a new iron bridge that had just been put up. The storm blew the bridge down, completely demolishing it, just before the ill-fated train, was due. The night was so dark and the rain falling in such torrents that, although the train was running very slowly, nothing could be seen any distance ahead, and the engine rushed headlong into the gap where the bridge had stood but a moment before. The engineer, Pat. Welch was instantly killed and his fireman, Dan. Howington, very seriously injured, how badly cannot be escertained, as all communication with Hillsboro by wire is cut off and reports of the accident were obtained from passengers on this morning's inbound train. Only the baggage car followed the engine into the stream, the remainder of the train staying on the track. So far as learned the fireman and engineer were the only ones hurt at all. The engineer, Mr. Pat Welch, was one of the oldest and best employed by the I. & St. L., and had been running on the eastern division, between Mattoon and Indianapolis. The run to St. Louis yesterday was the first he had made on the Western division for two years. The track of the I. & St. L. is, of course, closed until the bridge can be replaced, but the regular trains will be run as usual. The company, in the meantime, is using the O. & M. track from Pana, beyond Hillsboro, to Taylorville, thence by the Wabash to Litchfield, where the main line is again reached. This morning's train came in but two hours late, and this evening's trains will be in on good time.

There is considerable sympathy felt for the miners, and many liberal subscriptions have been furnished to assist them in their distress. So far the miners have accomplished nothing to further their aims. The operators have had several meetings, and have decided to secure machinery, the introduction of which will displace the practical miner. The introduction of the "iron men" will take place in several of the mines next week, when trouble is looked for by some of the operators. The Pedagogical Society.

The special meeting of the Pedagogy Society did not come to order this morning until a quarter to 11 o'clock, President T. R. Vickroy presiding. Only about a dozen members were present, and for this reason Mr. F. M. Crunden was requested to delay the reading of his paper until the next meeting, two weeks from to-day, which, being the last meeting of the season, will be sure of having a full attendance. Mr. Crunden acceded to the request, and his paper, under the title of "Books and Text Books; the Public Library and the Public Schools," will be one of the most interesting features of the last meeting. R. S. Shilling, a candidate for membership in the society, was unanimously elected. The election of officers, which was to have been held this morning, was postponed until the first meeting in September. It was resolved that invitations should be sent to all the St. Louis teachers to attend the next meeting, both on account of its being the last one until September, and because Mr. Crunden's paper will be particularly interesting to teachers. The treasurer's report was read, showing a surplus of $27 50 left in the treasury. The report was unanimously approved, after which the meeting adjourned at 11:15 a. m.

A Young Girl's Mistake.

Depositions in the divorce case of Theresia Scherer against Jacob Scherer filed to-day for the plaintiff reveal a sad case of a young girl's matrimonial misadventure. She was but fifteen years of age when she married Scherer. From the testimony of her stepfather it appears she left home to get work. She was a good, virtuous, industrious little girl and independent in spirit. She surprised her parents by saying shortly afterwards that she had married Scherer. In three short months she discovered her mistake. Her husband received a little money from Germany and took to drinking. He tore up the mattresses and the household furniture; made general havoc at home and finally ran away. His wife went out to work to keep body and soul together, but was taken sick and had to return to her old home.

Rehearsal of "The Redemption."

The full rehearsal of "The Redemption," which will be given in Armory Hall this evening, was had at ten o'clock this morning. For the most part the chorus numbers were given with surprising smoothness, insuring a most satisfying performance to-night. We advise the readers of the POST-DISPATCH who have tickets not to fail to use them, and those who have no tickets to purchase them and go to the concert. It is a red-letter event, both in merit and promise, in the musical annals of St. Louis. It is unfortunate that a considerable number of excellent singers who think themselves worthy to give "The Redemption" with a wheezy organ and two untuneful pianos, in a little separate organization of their own are not in this festival scheme, with its superb settings, in which all St. Louis is so much interested, but it is a pleasure to know that the scheme goes forward all the same to a successful consummation without them.

A Day Among the Convicts in a Penitentiary.

A Burglar With a Tenor Voice and a Counterfeiter Who is Learning the Shoe Trade—How the Prisoners Eat, Sleep, Drink and Live—The "Solitary" Cell—Details of Convict Life.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

CHESTER, ILL., May 18.—The scenery about Chester is singularly beautiful and varied. Situated in the extreme corner of Randolph county, on the east bank of the Mississippi River, and near the mouth of the Okaw or Kaskaskia, part of it on a ragged, ribbed bluff, it is really a Chester on the hill and a Chester under the hill. Communication between the two Chesters is made by long flights of stairs which are doubtless great promoters of digestion. The city claims a population of 3,000, has several handsome churches, many pretentious private dwellings and substantial business houses. The city is lighted by five electric lights which are placed temporarily upon high posts, as the energetic Chesterites purpose building an electric tower in the dim future. The Southern Illinois Penitentiary is located about two miles above the city and is reached by a carriage road which follows the river line to the prison. The grounds comprise about one hundred and twenty-three acres and have a river front of one and one-third miles. The view from the warden's house is one of picturesque wildness and beauty. Back of the house are deep ravines and high bluffs, their rugged depths rich in limestone, sandstone, and seemingly inexhaustible in the best kind of brick clay and building material.

The Warden's house is built of sandstone, is four stories high, and has a frontage of 100 feet, with a wing 225 feet long. The first floor of the Warden's house is occupied by the kitchen, laundry, dining-room, etc., of the officers. On the second floor are the Warden's office, the receiving office and the public rooms; the third is occupied by the private apartments of the Warden, Commissioners and officers, and the fourth by the sleeping-rooms of the keepers and guards. In the rear is the chapel, a spacious apartment, with seating capacity for 1,000 persons. The chaplain's study and the library open into the chapel. The

CELL-HOUSE

(in the wing) is two hundred and twenty-five feet long, fifty-four feet wide, and forty-three feet to the top of the cornice, having fourteen windows, six feet wide and about twenty-eight feet high, on each side. The cell-block within the cell-house is four stories high, with cells on each side, numbering four hundred, with bunks in each for two men. They have good mattresses and pillows, a sufficiency of zebra-striped blankets, a small looking-glass, palm-leaf fans, and combs and candles are in all the cells. They are cleaned thoroughly by convicts detailed for that purpose, and many of them have a home-like appearance. In several of them pictures conceal the unsightly walls and the ceilings are festooned with different-colored tissue paper fashioned in artistic and tasteful designs. The cells are supplied with fresh air from the fan-house, which contains an eight-foot Sturtevant fan run by a steam engine. The air shaft is connected by means of a large air-duct with the warden-house chapel and cell-house. Small ducts lead from the main duct to each cell. A current of pure, fresh air is, by means of the fan, constantly driven through all the buildings and cells, warm in winter and cool in summer. The cell-house yard and the the whole institution are lighted by electricity. In the morning the prisoners on the east side of the corridor can enjoy the morning sun, and in the afternoon every cell on the west side receives a wealth of glory until sundown. The general management of the prison is in the hands of three Commissioners appointed by the Governor. At present the board consists of Isaac Clements, of Carbondale; P. J. Robarts and Gen. James Martin, of Alton. Major John C. Salter, the Warden, has been in charge of the prison from the start, and is assisted in the details of prison management by Deputy Warden Starkweather. Captain Aleck Sholl has charge of the books and accounts (assisted by a well-known bank teller of St. Louis), and Purchasing Agent Lowell attends to the supplies. The female prison is in the basement of the warden-house and is in charge of the matron, Mrs. Julia Ives. There are only eleven inmates at the present time. A woman of sixty years and also her daughter are serving a sentence of fourteen years, for infanticide. A mulatto woman has twenty years for the same offense, and the other convicts are serving short terms for larceny, save one incarcerated for arson. Her son, a boy fourteen years, a witless lad who assisted in scratching the matches, was placed in the Reform School at Pontiac. The female convicts are not locked in cells, but are housed in rather close quarters in a dormitory. It is nicely furnished with iron bedsteads placed on each side of the room, the beds neatly covered with white spreads; fluted pillow-shams conceal the head rests, and home or prison-made rugs at the side of each bed give the room the appearance of a boarding school dormitory. Pretty advertising cards and chromos are arranged on the walls in tasteful designs. Pots of flowering plants and trailing vines conceal the unsightly barred windows, and several sewing machines lend a home-likeness to the surroundings. The women take their meals in a small room and near by. Their table was covered with a red tablecloth and was neatly arranged, their being a trifle better than that provided for male convicts. They were clothed in gingham dresses, and on Sundays are allowed white collars and white aprons. All of the clothing (except the coats) used by the male convicts is made by the women. They are also employed in the laundry for the warden house and the family, all of which is under the inspection of the matron. Mrs. Ives relates a rather interesting family, a birth, death and marriage having occurred in a rather short space of time. The bride and groom entered the prison together, served their time, were married by Rev. Fred Thompson, the prison chaplain, and went east to try their luck as discharged convicts. A casual observer would presume that the woman had a good time of it, but I doubt if there is a man in the prison who would change positions with the female convicts, with the pretty flowers, pictures and pillow-shams thrown in. It seems that even in prison the men always have the best time. The male convicts have at least a breath of air, and can see a limited part of the sky while passing to and from their work, but the women seldom leave the prison. On Sunday, after divine service, the men are locked up in their cells until Monday morning, and if the elements are not too forbidding the women are allowed a short recreation in the yard under the care of the guards. Maj. Salter's treatment of the prisoners is kind but firm. He is ever ready to listen to their grievances, and tries to win their confidences and impress them with the belief that he is their friend. There are no iron rings by which men are fastened while the lash is applied by a brutal keeper. There are no shower-baths to be administered while a kind physician stands by to see how much physical torture his fellow-man can bear before outraged nature yields. There is no punishment but the solitary, and that is used only as a last resort. Every convict on entering prison, after registering and donning his Zebra suit, is given three tickets. One reads "Permission to see Friends," another "A Ration of Tobacco," and the third "Permission to Write." If the rules are violated these tickets are forfeited, to be earned by good behavior. Confinement in the solitary consists in being chained to the iron grating of the door during work hours, the soft side of a board at night and a diet of bread and water. A few hours in the solitary is generally sufficient to bring the most refractory convict to terms. The solitary prison consists of a small brick building in which Deputy Warden Starkweather has his office. The "solitary" proper is built of buff sandstone, like the warden-house, and contains two rows of cells, twenty-six in number. It is heated by steam, is well lighted, and is connected with the Deputy Warden's office by a high brick wall, enclosing a small yard. The prison library contains over 3,000 volumes. Many of them were presented by friends of the institution, while many volumes have been purchased with the gate money. Visitors are charged twenty-five cents admission to the prison building. An attentive usher conducts them through the yards and shops, and gives all necessary information. The walls of the library are decorated with wood cuts and chromos; long tables through the room are filled with papers, and it is well cared for by one Stewart, a convict. The POST-DISPATCH representative was at the prison on Sunday during

DIVINE SERVICE.

At 9 o'clock the gong sounded, and in ten minutes every prisoner was in his chair. The services were not of the usual order, and consisted of hymns by the choir and short addresses made by several members of the Illinois Legislature who were visiting the prison. The services commenced with prayer by the prison chaplain, followed by the reading of the Fifth Psalm. "The Rock That is Higher" was sung by the choir, several of whom are convicts. The solo was exquisitely rendered by a colored convict, his rich tenor voice filling the large auditorium. The name of the darky singer is Crosby, and his sentence is for thirty years for highway robbery. Miss Tillie Salter, the daughter of the warden, presided at the organ. The choir was assisted by Miss Bessie Salter, Mrs. Gill, wife of the resident physician, and Mr. Clements, one of the Commissioners. Mr. Ben O. Jones, of Massa county, addressed the convicts in an exceedingly happy manner and was frequently applauded by the zebra-striped men. Hon. I. W. Cox, of Lawrence county, made a few telling remarks. Hon. E. R. Kimbrough, of Vermillion county; Hon. John Parrish, of Cook county, and several other members made short addresses, and, judging from the frequent applause of the rather mixed audience, seemed to give entire satisfaction. There are Catholic services at the prison once a month. Mass is celebrated by Father Hagemann, of Chester. At the conclusion of the services the prisoners were marched back to their loneliness and gloom of the barred and quiet cells. There is no convict dining-room in the Chester prison. Their rations are placed in tin basins on long tables on the corridor of the cell. The convicts pass along in squads, and each receives his ration and passes on to his cell, stopping opposite his door. At a given signal all enter, and the doors are locked simultaneously by some intricate mechanical device. The Sunday dinner consisted of roast beef, mashed potatoes and pickles. Each convict helps himself liberally to bread, which is cut in slices an inch thick. All are allowed a knife, fork and a spoon, which they keep in their cells, also pepper, salt and vinegar, which are replenished every Sunday morning. A quarter of a pound of tobacco a week is given those that have the tobacco ticket in their possession. Mr. Hamilton has charge of the convict's kitchen, which is supplied with fine steam kettles, each holding sixty-five gallons. Two are used for coffee, one for beans, one for meat and one for vegetables. For the Monday

DINNER,

330 pounds of meat were used, half a bushel of parsnips, one peck of carrots, one peck of onions, ten pounds of split peas and two dozen three-pound cans of tomatoes, which, with a huge pile of dumplings and two tubs of stale bread for the thickening, made the noonday meal for the 590 State boarders.

Chris Doyle, the noted forger from Chicago has charge of the stores in the shoe factory, and the keepers speak of him as trusty and reliable. He is a stout, heavy-set man, and being very lame, is allowed the use of a cane. The laundry is presided over by three stalwart negroes. Several revolts have been planned, but resulted unsuccessfully, the scheme being usually given away by one of the gang. A short time ago several convicts made a rush for liberty, but the guards drew the bead upon them, and one poor fellow is now in the hospital for treatment. One of the convicts who gave away a gang of a hundred men who had planned a revolt is detailed to give out the bread, it being considered unsafe for him to remain in the cells. There are beardless boys, young and middle-aged men, and several whose heads were frosted with hair of silvery whiteness, among Major Salter's five hundred and ninety guests.

JERUSHA SQUEERS.

Barnum and His Colossus.

The papers along the route are very hearty in praise of the Barnum and London Combination, which is to commence a one week's engagement corner of Twentieth and Olive, Monday, May 28. The Baltimore American comments as follows:

At each the crowd was very great, and the seating capacity of the tent was taxed to its utmost. These large tents are open to the public, and are divided into museum, menagerie and circus. Jumbo, of course, was the first curiosity sought by all as soon as they gave their little tickets to the doorkeeper. His Royal Highness was standing near the entrance, and on his back was the children's seat, which he carried for years in the London "Zoo." Eagerly the little ones waited for their turn to be carried up the ladder by Arstingstall and allowed to sit on Jumbo's back. The cannibals were on exhibition for the first time. They are remarkably hideous in appearance—small heads, very black skin, with horrible welts all over their bodies. The Nubians, Indians and Zulus looked with disgust at the crowds which stood open-mouthed before the new arrivals. The menageries—elephants, camels, etc.—occupy a tent by themselves. The circus is a great conglomeration of riding, acrobatic, gymnastic, skatorial and spectacular feats, with a mixture of athletics and variety acts. Maggie Clair does her swinging-ring act with much dexterity. The Elliott Children, in their unicycle and bicycle acts; Emma Jutau, in her wonderful trapeze and mid-air evolutions, are a few of the most interesting performers. One of the most original acts of the entire show is the "Dude Clown." Perfect in make-up, excellent in speech and action, he—although he had only a small act—was the star of the peformance. If you want to see a "dude," go to the circus and see this one. The hippodrome races close the performance.

AMO TE.

How a Harvard Student Brought Desolation to a Happy Home.

From the New York World.

I.

Mrs. Blatherskite lives on Fifth avenue. Last week Mr. Erudite, a Harvard student, paid her a visit. She told him to stay a month. He consented. She telegraphed to Vassar College for her daughter Grace to come down immediately. Miss Grace came. Mrs. B. wanted Mr. Erudite to become her son-in-law. Mr. Erudite was bashful, but thought he could. Mrs. B., knowing the worth of evidence should he ever back out and a breach of promise ensue, told the maid to keep a sharp eye on Mr. Erudite and Grace. The maid did.

II.

Billing and cooing noted by maid.

Mrs. B. to maid: "What does Mr. Erudite say to Miss Grace when they meet in the morning?"

Maid to Mrs. B: "He says, ma'am, 'Have more tea.' I think the poor young gentleman isn't right in his head, ma'am. He says 'Have more tea' so often to Miss Grace. Here's a card, ma'am, that he put under her door yesterday morning, but he spells so odd. He has no a in his tea."

"Give me that card, Dear me, what does it mean? 'Amo te, amo te.' Surely, that's Greek. Happy thought. I'll ask Professor Buchsmeller what it means when he comes to give grace her Latin lesson.

III.

Mr. Buchsmeller is a graduate of Heidelberg. Is dead in love with Mrs. Blatherskite. Never told her so. Never told her husband so.

IV.

Mr. Buchsmeller rings. Mrs. B. takes him into the back parlor and hands him the card with "Amo te" on it.

V.

Mr. Buchsmeller throws his arms around the neck of Mrs. Blatherskite and gives her 992 kisses. He exclaims: "My cup of happiness is filled. My love, my darling, let us leave this very day—fly on the wings of love and leave your pig and husband——"

VI.

Mr. Blatherskite comes home early. Meets Mr. Eruidite in the dining-room. Both walk up to the parlor. Both witness the tableau. Mrs. Blatherskite faints.

VII.

The gentleman from Heidelberg jumps through the window minus hat, sans spectacles.

VIII.

Mrs. Blatherskite is served with a summons and complaint in divorce proceedings.

Mr. Erudite goes back to Harvard a bachelor.

THE LOUNGER.

I HEAR of a great many presumably good pictures coming to St. Louis, but I haven't much confidence in the general reputation of our people as art-connoisseurs. There are hundreds of ladies and gentlemen here whose love for the good and beautiful leads them to invest hundreds of dollars every year in what to them appear to be choice and valuable bits of coloring, and the walls of their homes are hung with pictures of one kind or other, which, although often unaccountably wretched, have celebrated names written in their corners or inscribed on the back of the canvas. These paintings have been purchased at from $50 to $100 from a dealer, or at some of the occasional art sales brought to this city by distinguished foreign gentlemen of enterprising antecedents. The owners of these remarkable paintings fondly imagine that they are in posssession of originals by the master-artists whose names are placed upon the work. Not so. I have heard of several instances in which friends have been surprised to find each other owning copies of identically the same picture—a head of Goupil or a landscape by one of the most famous of the European brotherhood. The friends were, of course, surprised, but there was no necessity for the expression of astonishment, as they could find numerous other copies, if they only cared to look around. These are all the work of cheap, but clever, artists or art-students, purchased almost for a song by the conscienceless dealer, and thrown out as bait to that portion of the æsthetically inclined public who like pictures but cannot tell the artistic difference between a chromo and an old master, and would find more to admire in a chewing tobacco decoration filling half the space of a grocery front or a Goddess of Liberty splattered upon the wheel-house of a steamboat than in the famous Munkacsy painting now on exhibition in Vienna and over which artistic Europeans have almost gone crazy. It is because so many St. Louisans who have exalted pretensions and who like to be esteemed art-wise are so easily imposed upon that I have not the slightest confidence in their taste or knowledge in the direction of picture-buying.

BUT perhaps they are to be pardoned for their lack of judgment in lavishing their money—not upon the artist, mind you, but upon the art-shark. For the artist himself is not free from tricks nowadays. He strikes a good line of work, makes a picture that becomes popular; that sells high, and the first thing you know he has multiplied not only the idea, but the actual body and soul of the first success, to such an extent that its value, measured in dollars and cents, is really very little, while his own reputation dwindles in the ratio of the replication of the work. I know a gentleman, the proprietor of a leading daily newspaper in this city, who paid a good price for one of Gale's marines. He was delighted with his purchase, and might have continued so had he not run across another marine view by the same artist. "Why," said he, opening his eyes in astonishment, and afterward adjusting his spectacles to get a good look at the work; "why, that's the same picture as mine exactly, only he's got the ship turned the other way." And so it was. The artist had been reproducing himself, and just gave the vessel in the picture a different tack to thinly disguise his poverty of originality.

SO FAR I have spoken only of art and artists. Now I desire to call attention to the art-dealer, and in what I have to say it would be well to explain that no word or reflection is to be construed against home dealers, whose honesty I have no reason to doubt. But in past years this city has been visited by numerous itinerant dealers, men who make annual flights across the waters, and, buying up the product of European studios, hie them back to this land of bargains to hawk their stocks to the art patrons of the large cities of the country. Less than a year ago I visited a water color sale here, in company with W. L. Marple, the well-known artist, who declared that although there were many, very many beautiful and meritrious works in it, there were others unworthy the names attached to them. I have heard connoisseurs say that the collection was a good one, but I also heard them remark that the majority of the pictures were not by any means originals, but cheap copies. In all cases of this kind the people of St. Louis should fully inform themselves, before buying a work, whether it is an original by the artist whose name it bears or merely a base but pretty counterfeit. If it is an original it will cost a great deal of money; if it is a copy it may be had cheap, and the chances are that the majority of the pictures auctioned at such a sale will bring prices not at all consistent with the value of original works. Leaving the collection alluded to, however, out of consideration entirely, I will give the readers of the POST-DISPATCH an idea of the manner in which the fly-by-night art dealer makes his preparation for a season of sales, and show how easily and successfully he imposes upon the poor people who buy pictures but know no more about art than they know about the prize-fighting attributes of the Trilobite.

IN the first place the business is very profitable. A man with half an eye will be able to see that when it is understood that one of these itinerants can bring two hundred or three hundred pictures to a town of say 100,000 inhabitants, and assume an expense of $800 to $1,000 for a three or four days' sale. He announces in the newspapers that he has originals from the most celebrated studios of the Old World, pays heavy advertising bills, fits up a temporary establishment "regardless of expense," and then can afford to take the chances of having extraordinary works sacrificed under the hammer of an auctioneer, frame, glass and all, for a pittance that is an absolute insult to the artist who is given the credit of having painted the picture. Well, the itinerant dealer can very readily afford to take such chances, and does; and in running such alarming risks generally amasses a fortune. This is how he does it: Every winter the studios of Paris, Madrid, Barcelona, Florence, etc., are over-run by art sharks from this side of the Atlantic, who seek out the works of the best artists, and, after spreeing around in Bohemia for a few days, and getting into the good graces of the brotherhood, manage to buy up a few good pictures at a comparatively small figure. The round of the studios having been made, the shark, with a clear head but a murky conscience, finds himself in possession of probably 1,000 good originals. These he takes to Paris—to the Grub street of the Latin Quarter—and employs drudges at a few francs a day, generally not more than five, to make fifteen or twenty copies of each. Some of these art-mechanics are really clever with their brushes; with others their copying work is as execrable as those works that emanate from their so-salled originality. Having secured the requisite number of copies, varying in degrees of wretchedness and merit, the shark comes to New York with his 1,000 originals. They are spread out somewhere, and the press and public are invited to view them. The press and public at once go into ecstacy, as they were expected to do; there is a great deal of enthusiasm and noise; the originals are widely advertised, and soon they are quietly stored away. A month or so afterwards there are received at the Custom-house 15,000 water colors. They are not of much value, because they have no artists' names attached. The customs duties are therefore light. The number is large, some of the work really excellent, but the shark doesn't care to tell the press or public anything about them. He prefers to cast them off in silence to his quarters. It is deemed best not to advertise them. Why? We shall see.

THE shark, having his stock of pictures on hand, lays out his route for the summer. If he has thirty towns in his list, he divides up his originals so that each gets a few of them. Beginning with New York and following him through Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati and Louisville, I take the catalogue of each place and find each filled with the names of the self-same eminent water-color artists. I find that he has brought one or two originals from Joris' studio, and that he has 'sold a Joris in every large city he has struck en route—perhaps six of them—and still he has a Joris left when he gets here, and after selling this positively last one to some St. Louis admirer of the artist will have one left for every city he strikes after he leaves here. The 15,000 copies that followed the 1,000 originals to New York are found to be a very convenient reserve fund when such demands are made upon the dealer's stock by the throng of Joris-crazed purchasers. When the sale opens the shark's St. Louis catalogue is found to be a very faithful copy of the catalogues that preceded it. His pictures are advantageously hung in some well-known locality. The people rush in to view and admire them. The names of artists of reputation are attached to them, and therefore they must be great works. The few originals that have been assigned to St. Louis are sprinkled in among the multitude of copies, and there are not many people who can distinguish between the genuine and the counterfeit. In St. Louis here probably a dozen men are good judges of art and can be trusted to pass upon the merits of a picture. The reporters of most of the daily press, who can hardly explain the artictic distinction between a fire-clay brick and a Phidian statue, swarm around and write lengthy but empty molasses-candy notices, that are calculated to throw dust in the eyes of the already blind public. Then the sale begins. There is a crowd. The cheap copies bring $60, $70 or $100 each, and are knocked down to the willing and rejoicing purchasers. The original is placed on the easel; the auctioneer works hard to get a good price for it. If $300 or $800 is not bid, the dealer buys it in himself; for some of these originals are worth 1,000 francs each, and the shark does not care to part with one of them unless he can get its value. He is willing to make a bushel of money off the copies, but will not lose a cent on an original. When the sale is over the shark is many thousands of dollars ahead, scores of St. Louisans have their houses stored with fraudulent daubs for which they have paid twenty times their original value, and shark and victim are still happy—the former's delight being based upon the ease with which his St. Louis patrons have parted with their money, and the latter's blissfulness resting upon that corner-stone of happiness known and recognized the world over as ignorance.

I DO do not desire to dissipate the dreams of any reader of the POST-DISPATCH who may have invested his or her money at any of the auction sales presided over by itinerant dealers; but I think investigation will show that many houses here are flooded with cheap art-products, for which extraordinary prices have been willingly but ignorantly paid. I have seen many evidences of imposition of this kind in the residences of well known citizens, whom I might name if it were not that a great laugh would be raised against them. Several of these gentlemen have, in an entirely unpretentious way, expended thousands of dollars in beautifying their homes, and it is really a pity and a shame that wandering and adventurous swindlers should be allowed to impose upon their good-natured but uncultivated appreciation of art.

"DRUNK AND DISORDERLY."

This is a common term in the police courts. There are various stages of drunkenness, and all manner of degrees of disorderly conduct. But drunkenness is in itself disorder. It disorders mind, body and estate. It confuses the brain, bewilders the affections, confounds the digestive organs and demoralizes the purse. It makes misery of its victim and of all who are dependent on him. There are many men who have by indulgence in strong drink sunk to the lowest stage of disorderly depravity. Even for such there is hope. Dr. D'Unger's Cinchona Rubra—remedy for drunkenness—will cure their vile habit, and take away the appetite for drink. A lady in St. Louis who had almost despaired of saving her husband, writes: "Since he took the medicine he has not tasted alcohol in any form; nor has he any desire for it." From Burlington, Iowa, a lady writes: "One of our worst topers has been cured entirely by the use of your Cinchona Rubra." Write to Dr. D'Unger, 81 South Clark street, Chicago.

THE "PROVISION CORNER."

The Brokers and Dealers who are Found There—Personal Traits.

SOMETIMES when I drift over into the "provision corner" on 'Change, away from the bustle and hullabaloo of the "grain pit," I feel as though I had just left the roar and confusion of the city's business streets for the quiet of the residence portion—of the country, I was very near saying. In the "provision corner" everything seems to glide along calmly and noiselessly. There is never any excitement perceptible. Business appears to be transacted without the fuss or howling that makes the "grain pit" such a nuisance to the members quietly disposed. The men who frequent the southwest corner of the big hall talk slowly and quietly. There are no wild rushes, hustling and horse-play among these calm, sedate, and generally middle-aged men. They are great hands for resting themselves. The first thing one of these provision men does when he gets on 'Change and in his own district, is to either sit down somewhere or else hang himself up on a heater, table or something where he can relieve his weary feet. I don't know whether being tired is chronic with these provision men, but it looks very much that way. They enjoy a little tepid excitement in watching the changes in the Chicago chalk markets, and, for a change, in matching nickels quarters, but outside of these there is very seldom anything happens to stir the rather stagnant current of their trade.

BUT while their business life is so calm and seemingly so uneventful, there are some heavy trades every now and then made in this corner, and the total business transacted for the year, when footed up at the end of the season, runs into the millions of dollars. A great deal of their trading is done by telegraph, and the click-click of the instruments on 'Change have many times flashed away orders that have resulted in an immense volume of trade for the benefit of St. Louis brokers or packers. They are great hands for keeping their trades locked in the security of their own breasts, are these St. Louis provision men, and it is as natural for a commercial reporter to expect to hear "on p. t." tacked on to the end of a sale or purchase he has just received from one of them, as it is for him not to expect a report from Col. Howard just after he has sold several hundred thousand pounds of meats or a few thousand tierces of lard. Of course if they don't want to give their business away they don't have to, but it is rather discouraging, to say the least, for the hard-working reporter, who has seen every man in the trade and walked his feet off, with only a few items as the result, to find out the next day that some of them have sold a million pounds or so of meats. There is one young man in this corner who is remarkable for this. He will deliberately stand up and say he has done nothing, when he knows, the reporter knows and he knows the reporter knows that he is telling a——what is not so.

THE provision men, but more especially the packers and other sellers, are always bulls on the market. In this they are like the cotton factors, who, if cotton should advance to 50 cents a pound, would firmly believe, and be prepared to prove, that it was worth a dollar. The brokers and buyers, on the contrary, are reliable to be bearish at times, more especially when they are on the buy and want it cheap. But the packers are always cheerful and sanguine, even in the face of a great decline. It is really a comfort to meet Jas. Meagher, and I would advise any disheartened bull to hunt him up when the market is against him. No matter how fast Chicago may be running down, and how black the clouds are banking up around a demoralized market, Mr. Meagher is as bright and confident as ever. "A little weak," he will remark cheerfully; "but the stuff is good property and we are not selling any at these prices. No, sir, this decline won't last." Michael McEnnis takes a break in price very easily, too, and he will lean over a heater with you and on the marble slab figure out why it shouldn't decline, to your own and his satisfaction. Mr. McEnnis is a great stand-by of the corner, and his kindly, cheery manner heartens up the crowd very often when they feel cast down by hard luck or bad markets.

TALKING about brokers makes me think what a great number of these there are in the "provision corner." There is George Kinsky, the Councilman-maker, the politician par excellence of the Exchange, the man of the clear cut speech, every sentence issuing from his lips as nicely rounded off and polished as though it came through a turning plane. Walter Bartley, perhaps, is the heaviest weight of the corner, and the leading buyer in French orders. A thorough French scholar is he, too, and to hear him say "Wee, Musoo," is enough to break up a young ladies' seminary. There is not much more dignity found to the square inch on the floor than Ewing Hill carries around with him. An embryo politician is Maj. Hill, and it is said his aspirations are not confined to the Mayor's office. But, though he is a first-class broker, Clint Dutcher and Phil Taylor say he can't play seven-up any better than can President Ewald, who will persist in playing it alone when he finds a jack in his hand. To run through the list would take up all the space allowed for this lounging gossip. To speak in detail of M. E. Martin, one of the shrewdest and far-sighted men on the floor; Hugh Ferguson, the low-voiced; E. B. Eno, the well-posted, but there is one who deserves special mention. That is Frank Gainnie, said to be the most voluminous talker on the floor, but who has a right to talk, as he knows how to talk well, and is one of the best organizers and the hardest workers to be found. When any enterprise of importance to the Exchange is started Frank Gainnie's shoulder is always to be found at the wheel, and, though a small man, the energy he puts into his work is wonderful and gets away with much heavier weights than he is. Mr. Gainnie made a brilliant race for the Presidency at the last election, and his friends say he will get there next year.

OHIO POLITICS.

The Fight in the Buckeye State Waxing Warm.

The Feuds and Factions Which are at Loggerheads -- Candidates' Chances--Taking Their Scalps.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 19.—A dispatch from Columbus to the Tribune says: While the two ends of Ohio are sifting the merits of Judge Foraker, of Cincinnati, and State Treasurer Turney, of Cleveland, with a view to their availability as Republican candidates for Governor, and of Messrs. Hoadly and Durbin Ward on the other hand as the Democratic candidates with casual diversions toward Comptroller Lawrence and Congressman Geddes, Governor Foster, serene in comfortable possession of the place at which ambition is aiming, vaults over the formality of nominating conventions, and looks ahead to results in October with perfect confidence in Republican success. "We shall have to fight hard and keep awake every day," he says, "but we shall carry the State. The Democrats are before us in limiting the field of candidates, but what they have been doing noisily, we have done in a quiet way, and I dare say there is no more certainty whom they will nominate than whom we will. Indeed, there will turn out to be much uncertainty in present Democratic calculations, for, despite the momentum in Mr. Hoadly's favor, set going by his late protest that he and Mr. Pendleton were not in league, I have it on good authority that intends to go into the convention to present the name of Durbin Ward. There will have to be a very strong Hoadly combination to resist such an appeal, for the simple, sturdy character of Judge Thurman commands the devotion of the old line Democrats, and when it is known positively that he is taking sides, a following will spring up like an army. I had thought with every one else, until I heard about this, that Hoadly was reasonably sure of the nomination, but Ward's chances now seem to me quite as good. The truth is, when the Democrats come to think soberly about it, the bulk of their party want a steady, consistent Democrat. They do not find any such article in Mr. Hoadly, who is an exceedingly bright man and a clever lawyer, but as capricious politically as a weathercock. He was a Republican until 1872, when he went into the Greeley movement. He voted the Republican ticket in 1873 and 1874 and 1875, when he supported Mr. Hayes for Governor. In 1876 he voted for Mr. Tilden, and since then, I believe, has remained steadily with the Democrats. I understand that because he was interested with him as an attorney, perhaps in Western railroad wrecking schemes. General Ward has always been a Democrat, prompt and ready for party service and an effective worker. There would be no doubt about his calling out the full party strength. I do not know that so much could be said of Mr. Hoadly, although everybody recognizes his ability and personal excellence. Now, while this rivalry has been springing up among the Democrats, we have been quietly looking over the field. I suppose every well known man in the State who would take the nomination has been considered. We do not know yet who has the best chance, but I predict that there will be no ballot for Governor in the convention. Feeling will shape itself in favor of some one who will be nominated by acclamation. I suppose Judge Foraker and Mr. Turney are talked of more than any other gentlemen. Mr. Turney has said all along that he does not want the place and wouldn't take the nomination. He said to me yesterday that his determination was still unchanged. Comptroller Lawrence is a candidate. These are three good men. It won't make

JUDGE THURMAN

HE SHIFTED OVER TO TILDEN

A PARTICLE OF DIFFERENCE

in the result which may get the nomination. We can win with any of them. Gen. Keifer dropped in upon me the other day. 'I'm against the man,' said he, 'that can't get the most votes.' That expressed my feeling, and I think the feeling of every Republican. We are for the candidate who will bring us the most votes, whoever he may be. As to the choice between Judge Foraker and Mr. Turney, they are different styles of men. Judge Foraker is probably not over forty-good-looking, a fine speaker, of splendid ad, dress, and, although the objection holds good that he is not now known in the upper part of the State, except among lawyers, he would soon make a striking impression on the stump. He is innocent, I believe, of political management, but as Governor would acquit himself well. Mr. Turney's nomination would be received with instant favor. He could not go on the stump, nor would he need to. Having risen from the forge to a position of high public trust, and always bearing himself with credit, he would enlist support that might otherwise be doubtful, and would be sure, besides, of polling a full party vote. He may yet be induced to

ALLOW HIS NAME

to be taken into the convention. He could get the nomination, I have no doubt, if so disposed."

"What of the newspaper allusions to Mr. Hayes and Mr. Sherman?"

"Nonsense. No one has thought seriously of Mr. Hayes as a candidate, not even himself. Mr. Sherman probably does not want the nomination. He is where he wants to be, and where he belongs. Besides, to consider his candidacy from the standpoint of party management, he voted for the tariff bill with the obnoxious wool schedule, and even if he wanted the nomination it would be of doubtful expediency for the party to put in the field a man who had thus called upon himself the distrust, if not the enmity, of a very large class of Republicans."

"And about yourself?"

"Oh, I have nearly a year yet to remain here. Then I shall return to my private affairs which demand my attention."

"What was the meaning of Judge Longworth's resignation from the Supreme bench when this question was about to come up again?"

"It meant simply that he was tired of it. He is worth prospectively $10,000,000. When he entered the law, instead of taking it easy he worked hard. In 1878 he was elected to the Superior Court of Cincinnati. Two years ago he was nominated for the Supreme bench, delivering a roaring speech, which made the convention think they had heard enough of him to make him just the man they wanted, and he was put down on the slate without a ballot. He came here and was dragged down to the most laborious work, trying to catch up with a docket four years ahead of him. At home he had a law office and a carpenter shop. He was a great canoeist, liked to go fishing on Sunday, and what not, but there was no time here for diversion, and after a year he grew tired of it and stepped out. That is all there was to it."

"Will considerations bearing upon the next United States Senatorship enter into the conventions?"

"I think not."

"Does Mr. Thurman not want to go back?"

"The Democrats can't carry the Legislature. Mr. Thurman doubtless feels after his long service in the Senate that he would be more comfortable there than elsewhere, and if the chance should be offered probably he would return; but he is seventy years old, and seems to be living contentedly here. There is no talk yet about Republican candidates."

BEAUTY AND ELEGANCE.

Both Attained by Home Workmen—A Fine Display of Handsome Furniture.

There are some people in St. Louis who have an idea that nothing desirable can be purchased west of the Allegheny Mountains, or, if anything worth having can be found in this city, one must go below Tenth street to get it. That this idea is false, it is only necessary for one to inspect the splendid establishments which are to be seen west, north and south of the old business limits. It was growing wonder and surprise that a POST-DISPATCH reporter experienced yesterday, when he viewed the spacious store-rooms of H. L. Niedringhaus, the dealer in furniture, at 1005 Franklin avenue. This establishment can compete in the quantity and quality of its wares with any in the country, and after a careful inspection of the immense, varied and elegant stock there offered for sale, the conclusion is inevitable, not only that one need not leave St. Louis, but that one need not leave Franklin avenue to obtain the handsomest furniture in the market at the most reasonable prices. Mr. Niedringhaus has on hand everything that heart can desire in the furniture line, from the most elegant and expensive to the plainest and cheapest. He has devoted his attention to upholstering, and makes a point of upholstering in his own shops every piece of furniture that is sold in the warehouse. He has a large upholstering establishment in connection with his store, and by employing skillful workmen—real artists in their branch of trade—he is enabled to produce marvels of novel and tasteful designs. He makes it a rule that no two sets of furniture shall be alike, and in this way free scope is given for the exercise of individual tastes, and new designs are constantly being perfected. By doing his own upholstering also he can guarantee every piece of furniture which leaves his store. Especial attention is devoted to elegant parlor and bed-room sets, and on the top floor, in a commodious store-room, 80x90 feet, a wealth of beautiful furniture of this kind can be seen ranging from $1,000 down to the lowest grade, in all styles and designs of upholstering, and in walnut, mahogany, ebony and other woods. There are in the store-rooms handsome library and cylinder book-cases, settees, bric-a-brac shelves and cabinets, wardrobes, sideboards and other household articles in every variety of quality and pattern. There is also a large stock of willow ware goods to be seen in bronze, mahogany, ebony and other colors, cushioned and plain. The establishment of Mr. Niedringhaus is well worth seeing, if only for the purpose of discovering what home workmen can do in the way of producing requisite articles of furniture. One pleasant feature about the house is that those who wish to select carefully and those who only desire to see lovely and novel articles for household use may visit it and inspect the stock without purchasing, and with certainty of being treated with courtesy and kindness. The salesmen are always glad to show visitors, whether wishing to buy or not, through the whole establishment, and Mr. Niedringhaus has extended a cordial invitation to all to pay him a visit at any time.

WHITE AND BLACK.

Brother Gardner Balances the Account Between the Races.

From the Detroit Free Press.

There was an unusual amount of coughing and sneezing and blowing of noses and shuffling of feet as the meeting opened, and it was two or three minutes before Judge Cadaver pushed his elbow through a pane of glass and Pickles Smith upset a bench and produced a sort of crisis. Then Brother Gardner softly observed:

"In case de white an' de black races should change places I wonder if de black race would recognize de eternal fitness of things in a proper light? If de white race had been bo'n ignorant, stupid, erratic an' mo' or less vicious, an' de black race had produced all de philosophers, philanthropists an' humanitarians, I wonder if we would have made de same errors an' mistakes dat de white folks have?

"De white statesmen put de ballot inter our hands to elevate our standard, an' yit not mo' dan one in ten kin read de names of candidates, an' not one in twenty kin explain why he should vote one ticket in preference to de odder.

"De long-headed white polytishun gin us de balance of power in dis kentry, but forgot to gin us any of de offices.

"De white man prides himself dat de black race has made great progress in de las' dozen y'ars. An' yit he has crowded him out of ebery place whar' he could airn a dollar widout usin' his muscles.

"De white orator loses no opportunity to remind us dat we have de same civil rights as de President of de United States, an' yit if we sot beside him in de street kyar, de opera house or de church he hunts for ander seat.

"De white man has wept ober our enslavement, an' den coolly seen us go hungry an' ragged as free men. He has encouraged us to reach up, an' stood ready wid a club to rap our knuckles. He has opened de doah of eddecashun, but shet de doah of advancement. He has made us his hobby an' his pet, but secured his whitewashin' at de werry lowest figgers. He has perverted facks an' falsified statisticks fur our benefit, but charged us big interest fur borrowed money.

"Gem'len, de color am black. De face ain't purty. De feet mus' hab room. Jist remember dese facks when de white man cums purrin' around an' predicks dat we have got his race on de run. De black man who turns his back on a looking-glass am preparin' fur a calamity dat will wrench his heart-strings."

En passant to her home in New York she has been prevailed upon by her old pupils, among whom are numbered most of our young society belles, to remain in the city a short time, that they may enjoy once again, and probably for the last time, the pleasure of being with her, and also profit a little by her instruction. Since Mrs. Vandenhoff has been in the city she has been the recipient of many courteous and hospitable attentions. On Tuesday evening Mrs. Ben Walker gave a "high tea" at 5 o'clock, in her honor, to which a number of guests were invited, and refreshments were served in beautiful style by Beers; after which they adjourned to the Pickwick, by invitation, to witness "The romance of a Poor Young Man."

THE IDEAL WIFE.

Somewhere in the world must be
She that I have prayed to see,
She that Love assigns to me.

Somewhere Love, her lord and king,
Over her is scattering
Fragrance from his purple wing.

By the brink of summer streams
I have dreamed delicious dreams;
What I will, my sweet one seems.

In the sheen of autumn skies
I have pictured sunny eyes,
Till the thought too quickly dies.

When the winter fire burns low,
Lovely faces come and go
As the dying ashes glow.

'Tis her voice I hear so oft
In the music low and soft
That the western breezes waft.

Tell her, Love, that years fly fast,
Bid her come to me at last,
Ere her golden days are past.

Shall we ever, ever meet?
Shall I find in thee, my sweet,
Visions true and life complete?

Whisper low to Love apart,
Whisper, darling, where thou art,
Perfect wife and noble heart.

J. WILLIAMS.

GREELEY AND RUM.

Bill Nye's Experience in a Prohibition Town out West.

From the Detroit Free Press.

When I visit Greeley I am asked over and over again as to the practical workings of woman suffrage in Wyoming, and when I go back to Wyoming I am asked how prohibition works practically in Greeley, Col. By telling varied and pleasing lies about both I manage to have a good deal of fun, and also keep the two elements on the anxious seat. There are two sides to both questions, and some day when I get time and have convalesced a little more, I am going to write a large book relating to these matters. At present I just want to say a word about the colony which bears the name of the Tribune philosopher and nestles so lovingly at the chilly feet of the Rocky Mountains. As I write, Greeley is apparently an oasis in the desert. It looks like a fertile island dropped down from heaven in a boundless stretch of buffalo grass, sage hens and cunning little prairie dogs. And yet you could not come here as a stranger and within the colonial barbed wire fence, procure a bite of cold rum if you were President of the United States with a rattlesnake bite as large as an easter egg concealed about your person.

You can, however, become acquainted, if you are of a social nature and keep your eyes open. I do not say this because I have been thirsty these few past weeks and just dropped on the game, as Aristotle would say, but just to prove that men are like boys, and when you tell them they can't have any particular thing, that is the thing they are apt to desire with a feverish yearn. That is why the thirstful man in Maine drinks from the gas fixture; why the Kansas drinkist gets his out of a rain barrel, and why other miracles too numerous to mention are performed.

Whisky is more bulky and annoying to carry about in the coat tail pocket than a plug of tobacco, but there have been cases where it was successfully done. I was shown yesterday a little corner that would hold six or eight bushels. It was in the wash-room of a hotel, and was about half full. So were the men who came there, for before night the entire place was filled with empty whisky bottles of every size, shape and smell. The little fat bottle with the odor of gin and livery stable was there, and the large flat bottle that you get at Eavens, four miles away, generally filled with something that tastes like tincture of capiscum, spirits of ammonia and lingering death, is also represented in this great congress of cosmopolitan bottles sucked dry and the cork gnawed half up.

When I came to Greeley, I was still following the course of treatment prescribed by my Laramie City physician, and with the rest, I was required to force down three adult doses of brandy per day. He used to taste the prescription at times to see if it had been properly compounded. Shortly after my arrival here I ran out of this remedy and asked a friend to go and get the bottle refilled. He was a man who was not familiar with Greeley in its moisture producing capacity, and he was unable to procure the demon in the town for love or wealth. The druggist even did not keep it, and although he met crowds of men with tears in their eyes and breath like a veteran bung-starter, he had to go to Eavens for the required opiate. This I use externally now on the vagrant dog who comes to me to be fondled and who goes away with his hair off. Central Colorado is full of partially bald dogs who have wiped their wet cold noses on me, not wisely but too well.

EASY DIVORCE.

Over One Hundred Cases Filed in Washington in a Year.

Mrs. Belva Lockwood, the Female Lawyer, Discusses the Subject—She Thinks the National Capital an Easy Place to Untie the Knot—The Law in Other States.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17.—Over one hundried divorce suits were entered in the equity courts of the District of Columbia during the year ending to-day. The result has not been quite one hundred divorces, for some of the cases are still pending. But in most of the cases where final action has been taken the applicants have been granted a divorce and each has taken up his or her burden of life singly.

"What is the reason of it?" your correspondent asked of Mrs. Belva Lockwood, the noted female lawyer, as she sat in her parlors on F street to-day—"what is the reason that so many divorces are granted here. Is Washington an especially easy place in which to obtain a divorce?"

"I don't know," she laughed, "I have got a good many of 'em here, though I don't profess to be at all a divorce lawyer. I suppose I have had something like seventy-five cases here in Washington, and when there are good grounds I find no difficulty in getting divorces. If there are not good grounds I wont take them."

She sat erect as she talked, spoke vigorously and checked off her sentences with her right hand, in an argumentative way. The room in which she sat was a parlor just above her law office, which occupies the basement front of the house, which is a residence in the business part of the city. The parlor was rather plainly furnished. The furniture was not magnificent, the piano rather aged in appearance, the pictures mostly family photographs, and the books, which stood in a little rack in the corner, had titles like these: "History of Woman Suffrage," "Eminent Women of the Land," "Woman's Future." A painting upon the wall was a very fair representation of Mrs. L[illegible]ood. It represented a woman about fo[illegible] with gray hair braided carelessly back f[illegible] a face in which was a good deal of color indications of a good deal of energy. The picture was very much like Mrs. Lockwood, except that it appeared to have been painted five or six years ago. The hair is about as gray now, and the florid, vigorous color in the face, instead of being is well distributed, giving the suggestion that a vigorous use of her tricycle, which stood at the door as I entered, had brought both excellent health and some tan besides.

"I never take a divorce case," she continued, "unless there are good grounds for divorce. That being true, I find no difficulty in procuring divorces here, and if we are to judge by my experience, it might be said that divorces are easy in Washington."

"But, compared with other cities and States, how do the divorce laws and customs here seem to be?"

"I think it is easier to get a divorce here than in many other places," she said. "In Boston, now, the testimony is all given in open court, no matter how bad it may be, no matter what the charges or how painful for the most sensitive party. Now, here I seldom if ever take testimony in the open court. When a party wants a divorce their deposition and that of the witnesses is taken right here in my office or parlor. They are filed in court the proper proceedings had, and if there are good grounds for divorce under the law, it is granted, and that is the end of it."

"And are the requirements of the law less than those in other States?"

"Yes, less than those in some States. In New York, for instance, it is much more difficult to get a divorce than here. Yet the laws here are not especially lax in that regard—they only grant divorce for desertion during a term of two years, for adultery, cruelty, larceny and some modifications of these general causes. Then no attention will be paid to applications for divorce, unless the persons have been residents of the District for two years or more. People often come here from Virginia, Maryland and from points further away to get divorces, but they don't get them. I don't think this is at all a famous place like Indiana, or Utah, or Connecticut, where a divorce may be had almost for the asking, but it is a much more satisfactory place for such a proceeding than some other cities I could name."

Yet, when it is remembered that the resident population of Washington—omitting the floating population, which has not a two years' residence here—is but about 175,000, it brings a ratio which, if applied throughout the United States, would give 30,000 divorces a year.

Comparing the law, of the District with those of it is found that a marked difference exists. In New York the causes on which divorce are allowed are force or fraud in obtaining the marriage, lunacy or idiocy, a prior marriage, the husband or wife still living, incompetency and marriage below a certain age. Thus several causes which apply in Washington, for which divorce is granted in here, are not allowed as factors in divorce in New York.

There is a great variety in the divorce laws of the country. In Maine it is said to be easier to get a divorce than to get a drink. The law reads: "Divorces may be decreed when the Judge deems it reasonable and proper, conducive to domestic harmony and consistent with the welfare of society." In North Carolina the law says: "Any just cause at the discretion of the Judge" may dissolve the marriage tie. In Virginia if a woman is discovered before marriage to have borne a bad character after marriage, without the knowledge of the man who married her, he may be divorced. In West Virginia the shoe goes upon the other foot, and if a woman discovers that her husband was a genuine rake before marriage she may unmarry. In Connecticut the law provides that "such mischief or misbehavior as permanently destroys happiness and defeats the purposes of marriage" shall constitute a legal ground for divorce. In Georgia mental incapacity is legal ground for divorce. In Alabama adultery or immorality committed before marriage, as well as after, dissolves the marriage tie. In Delaware adultery itself is not, in all cases, considered a sufficient cause for divorce. In Nevada a failure to provide the necessaries of life is sufficient grounds. Kentucky is said to permit divorce for one of a larger number of causes than any of the other States.

"CAMPOFELICE."

How a New Duke and Duchess Appeared in Parisian Society.

From the London Truth.

A new social constellation has burst upon Parisian view. It consists of a Duke and Duchess and the two daughters of the latter. We hear that their graces are thinking of purchasing the little insular kingdom on the Sardinian coast. His Grace is called the Duke of Campofelice. The coronet which he is entitled to wear has not yet had time to oxidize, and the colors and medals on his shield have a brand new glitter. His house is also in a new quarter. Ere he was a Duke he was Baron D'Estambourg, and I believe he was originally a Dutchman, born of honest parents, who did not aspire to a nobiliary rank. They were intelligent judges of fine art and bric-a-brac and turned to mercantile account their knowledge. This would explain His Grace's enlightened patronage of fine art, which he also studied in his youth to make it a profession. Where the Duchy of Campofelice is I have no idea. But I like the title. The choice of it proves a musical taste. It is euphonious and suggests to those who know Italian an idea of Arcadian happiness. In hearing it pronounced, one thinks of Auber, Metastasio and peasants in opera comique dresses coming forward to sing "Viva il Duca!" The origin of the fortune which gives sap to the strawberry leaves is honorable. It was made by a sewing machine patent. The patentee was the late Mr. Singer, who lived at Passy, rode daily in a carriage and four to his office and managed his affairs so badly as to involve those who were entitled to his wealth in crotchety lawsuits. The lady who was his undoubted widow, when she asserted her claim triumphantly to the fortune and the patent, married her actual husband. She is not in the least intoxicated by her title and is a model hostess. Her daughters, two in number, are lovely supporters of the ducal blason. They are pretty, dance to perfection, are not conceited and are highly accomplished. It is their intention to marry according to the dictates of their hearts. The late Mr. Singer was of that ancient race to which we owe so many bankers and musical composers. The Duchess of Campofelice is an American, and has the hospitable instincts which render the salons of her countrywomen the most agreeable of any in Paris. I like her and the Duke, although it seems to me they would have been wiser in not setting themselves up with strawberry leaves. With millions, intelligence, and two charming daughters, they could have well afforded to despise such baubles. Moreover, Italian dukedoms are so plentiful, and can be bought so very cheaply, that there is always a certain ridicule attached to them, unless they are a prefix to some great historical name.

COL. JACK HAYS.

Some Incidents in the Stirring Life of the Old Ranger.

From the San Francisco Call.

When quite a young man he was engaged as a surveyor in locating landscrip issued to the soldiers in the war of 1812. It was wild land; at any rate, Colonel Hays had need of quite a force of men to oppose the Indians, who roamed in numbers all over the country. George Work, who was the first Sheriff of Sonoma county, in this State, and who was shot and killed by a man while in the act of arresting him, used to tell the story. In company with Col. Hays he had gone out early one morning to reconnoitre the redskins, when suddenly they found themselves ambushed by a large party. It was then a ride for life. An Indian who rode a fleeter horse than the others gained on the fugitives, and shot Work's animal under him. This was a critical moment; but the Colonel was equal to the emergency. He called out quick and sharp,

"George, take my horse, and lasso the first Indian who comes up."

The Colonel dismounted and took a position where he was partly screened by projecting rocks. Work was in his place in the saddle, and in a twinkling had noosed the Indian. At the same moment the Colonel sent a ball through his heart and, as he fell out on the off side, with a bound like a panther, he was in the Indian's place, and both Work and himself rode rapidly out of danger.

A SCARED RECRUIT.

Col. Hays used to relate with some gusto the story of a raw young Tennesseean who had joined Gen. Sam Houston's army, when the Texan revolution was under full headway, and the Mexicans had invaded the country. It was in one of the first battles that took place, and was certainly the first big fight the young Tennesseean had ever seen. Where the hostile forces came in conflict there was a large patch of half-grown grass, and the Texans, anxious to take advantage of all the cover at hand, dropped out of sight at the first fire of the enemy. To the green Tennesseean the noise of musketry seemed like Pandemonium broke loose, and when he saw every one of his fellows drop as if killed, it was too much for him, and he let go everything and put out as fast as his legs could carry him. In his haste and fright, he ran across Sam Houston, who hailed him and wanted to know why he had left the field and where he was going.

"Home, just as quick as I kin git. They're all down, all killed. Saw 'em drop."

"Who do you mean?"

"Our side; our fellows. Mexicans killed 'em all, fust go-off."

"Young man," returned the old General, sternly, "make haste home. You've no business here. Go home and cross your blood with the Bowies'."

Copper in various shades is the rival of tobacco or cigar color.

Percales, batistes and zephyrs are selling rapidly at the moment.

Dress skirts may be very bouffant or clinging, whichever is preferred.

The Moliere shirt front remains in high favor for little people's dresses.

Children wear hats and bonnets in all the new shapes, just like their elders.

Velvet gauges and brocaded guages are handsome additions to dress fabrics.

Valenciennes lace trims many of the handsomest embroidered muslin dresses.

Percale robes, beautifully embroidered, are sold at very reasonable prices this season.

Copper-colored silks trimmed with black laces are the favorites with Parisian women.

Galignani's Messenger reports the wearing of lace to excess this summer on the other side.

Bride's trains are not very long when the dress is of India mull or any soft sheen fabric.

It is quite the fashion on the other side to wear lace tabliers, tunics and flounces on day dresses.

Striped, checked, shot and repped silks are much worn; so is velveteen and velvet brocaded grenadine.

Gray foule, combined with white in small quantities, is the dress of the fashionable women at present in Paris.

One of the favorite bonnets of Parisian women is a large poke, or cottage shape, called the American capote.

Long white embroidered muslin polonaises, trimmed with deep bands and edgings of embroidered muslin, will be worn.

This is a ribbon season, flats, bows and rosettes being worn on all parts of the dress, the bonnet, and the wrap or mantle.

Detached passamenterie ornaments are more fashionable for mantles and dress-trimmings than bands, braids or fringes.

Linen band collars have two buttonholes near the upper edge, through which narrow ribbon is run and tied in a long looped bow.

High sleeves and high collars, the long pointed basque, and the robe cut away from the hips remain the features in summer styles.

The Board of Health yesterday afternoon inspected the Liggett & Myers tobacco factory, Thirteenth and St. Charles streets. The offensive odors are attributed to defective shafts which cover the steaming apparatus.

"THE REGULARS."

People Who are Never Absent From a Base Ball Match.

Base Ball Cranks—Judges, Lawyers, Clerks, Actors, Firemen on the B. B. Grounds—Local Admirers of the National Game.

There is something so rapid, ever-changing, brilliant and soul-stirring about the national game, base-ball; something so thoroughly American about the sport, inasmuch as most games are played within two hours, and the excitement and enjoyment are condensed, that it is small wonder that the sport has taken such a hold upon the people that daily from 50,000 to 60,000 people sit with bated breath, to follow the sphere as it is fired from one end of "the battery" to the other, and watch with suspense the course of the athlete as he runs with speed and caution combined around the diamond. The American fails to understand the devotion of the Englishman to cricket, a game which consumes an entire day and often more, and to the uninitiated seems duller and stupider than a match at quoits or a moral game of croquet to the non-participant. There is something about base ball that savors of the American business life. Holidays are few in this country. To give up an entire day to witness an athletic exhibition of any nature seems such a willful waste of business time that the attraction must be extraordinary in order to secure a paying attendance. But base ball, commencing at 4 o'clock and ending by 6, interferes neither with business or supper, and if six games a week were played, and a good exhibition guaranteed, the Grand Avenue Park, inconveniently located as it is, would be sure of an attendance exceeding 4,000, and frequently running up to 10,000. There is a better knowledge to-day of base ball than of any other sport. Men who never saw a boat-race can definitely locate the blame for a lost game; people who cannot tell whether a horse is pacing or trotting can infallibly decide as to what constitutes an error; persons who never saw a rifle target readily decide the difference between an earned run and one made on errors. Perhaps 30,000 people in St. Louis read base ball scores with more interest than they do the 'proceedings of the Phœnix Park assassins' trials. As to boys, the interest they take in the national game is shown by the diamond worn on the sward of every vacant lot from Bremen to Carondelet, and Twelfth street to the King's Highway. Even the ladies are enthusiasts on the subject, and the presence of 1,500 of the fair creatures in the grand stand, on Thursday, shows that they have taken even a deeper interest in the struggle of brawn, nerve and skill that a base-ball game presents, than in the noble contests of the horse. They are perhaps a little obscure in the technicalities of the game, and apt to confound the left fielder and the pitcher; but, bless their dear hearts, they are loyal to St. Louis, and rejoice in the victories of "our club," or despond when the visitors are successful.

A GLANCE AT THE AUDIENCE

on any fine day, at the ball park, will reveal the presence of representatives of all respectable classes. Telegraph operators, printers who work at night, railroad men who go out on the road at nightfall, men of leisure (since the Johnson law went into force), men of capital, bank clerks who get away at 3 p. m., real estate men who can steal the declining hours of the afternoon, barkeepers with night watches before them, hotel clerks, actors and employes of the theaters, policemen and firemen on their day off, strangers in the city killing time, clerks and salesmen temporarily out of work, steamboat captains, clerks and mates, merchants in a position to leave their stores with a notice to the bookkeeper that they will not be back to-day, call-board operators who need recreation after the experiences of the noon hour, base-ball players, semi-professional and amateur; workingmen with lame hands; butchers, bakers, candlestick makers; mechanics out on a strike; lawyers in droves, an occasional Circuit judge, city officials, Commodore Lyndon A. Smith, the Mayor's private secretary, and last, but not least, doctors. It is by some very strange coincidence that whenever there is a game of ball at all apt to prove exciting that a majority of the young and middle-aged doctors of the city find a pressing call out towards the Fair Grounds. They drive briskly into the gate, hitch their horses with a professional air, buy a score sheet, speedily hunt a good seat in the grand stand, and become deeply immersed in a study of anatomy as presented by the eighteen active flannel-clad young men in the field before them. The doctors are all well up in base ball talk and "liners," "clean hit," "steal," "high fly," "foul," and all that sort of thing are as familiar to their tongues, as "aqua mississipibus" or "spiritus frumenti." They are all good umpires—from the grand stand—and discuss the decisions of the unfortunate man who dodges all the balls the catcher fails to stop with the same freedom that characterizes them in their dealings with a professional brother's methods.

There are to be seen at every game, rain or shine, some of the faces that have looked out upon the green field ever since the days of 1874, when the Brown Stockings knocked "sky-scrapers," and "daisy cutters," and the scores ran into the double figures. Sometimes, these gentlemen are called

"BASE BALL CRANKS."

The POST-DISPATCH reporter does not apply the term, preferring "enthusiast" or "devotee." Chief of the list of regular attendants is Clay Sexton, Chief of the Fire Department. He always comes out in his buggy, and turns the horse's head toward the northern gate, which in the event of fire is swung open, and Sexton dashes away, even should there be three men on bases and Billy Gleason at the bat. At critical points of a game Sexton's excitement is almost ecstatic. He fills the air with "Dog-gone my cats," or is speechless and breathing hard. He is a warm admirer of the St. Louis club, and nothing will shake his faith in the Gleason boys, whom, for a long time, he kept in the Fire Department, allowing them to supply substitutes whenever they played with the Browns of 1881 and 1882. During the game last Tuesday, when the St. Louis was making five runs and winning the game, the old gentleman's excitement was apoplectic. He yelled like a Comanche while the first four men were coming in, but when the fifth started for home he sank into the buggy-seat, and as he pulled his son by the leg he fairly gasped: "Yell, Lee; yell, my boy. Holler like you were putting out fire. You will never see anything like that again. Billy Gleason, Billy Gleason, if you were on the Fire Department you could have a week off for that lick." His eyes fairly glistened with joy. On Wednesday, when the second game was won, the old Chief fairly flew down town to tell the news. On Thursday he drove more sedately.

Second in rank, as "crank," "enthusiast" or "devotee," is the lawyer. He discusses ball players like an old turfman does horses. He knows every one in the country by name, has all the batting averages at his tongue's end, discusses pitchers learnedly, feels a spasm of disgust when a fly is muffed, and blushes for his sex when an error occurs at first base. He always scores the game, is generous in his applause, and takes more delight in a good game of ball than he does in a banquet of the Commercial Club, of which he is secretary. It is said that on one occasion he continued a case in court that was unfortunately set upon the same afternoon as a very close and doubtful match game.

HENRY AMELUNG

is seen at his office until late in the afternoon, but is always on the grand stand before the first ball is pitched. Henry is a demonstrative admirer of good playing, and if you cannot see him, just listen and you will hear him.

GEORGE MCMANUS,

the rotund treasurer of the Grand Opera-house, is always on hand except matinee days. With a short cigar between his teeth, he is heard to pronounce any failure in the field as a "bum play." Brilliant efforts are termed "dandies". Pat Short is a frequent visitor, and on Wednesday was heard to say that the park looked very well, but that Dick Halley could get up a better perspective set in two days' time.

Charles H. Turner is a regular. He keeps a score of every game, and files them away. He is a loyal St. Louisan, and has been a consistent admirer of the Browns for ten years.

Frank O'Neill is a sure enough base ball "crank." He was always severe in his criticism of bad plays until a week or two ago, when he took a hand in a little practice game, and is now nursing a split hand. He says that a man does not know what an infernal machine a base ball is until he has got one wedged between his third and little finger, and it requires three stitches to sew together the gaping wound caused thereby.

David Nicholson, the grocer, is always on the shady side of the grand stand in warm weather, but a dull March or October wind does not keep him away from his beloved sport.

D. P. Dyer, the lawyer, finds relief from the dry routine of his profession in the clean exciting exhibition which the national game affords.

Judge Horner, Judge Thayer and ex-Judge Lindley, gazed on one of the victories of the St. Louis club this week with expressions that ranged from the grave judicial frown to the pleased smile of the acquitted defendant.

Berry Mitchell, has allowed base ball to take a stronger hold on him than ever did the stage, and never misses a game, while as to knowledge of players and the fine points of the game he is a regular encyclopedia.

William Schaeffer drives out to every game. Joe Carr would rather miss the call-board than a good contest. Emil Besseh1 is fascinated with the sport. Charley Warner dotes on it. Dick Roche prefers it to a horse-race. Joe W. Norton has been a conspicuous ornament of the grand stand. Henry Paschell impatiently awaits the hour of play. Tom Ward always towers above the crowd. Harvey Willard is clean gone. Billy Medart is always where there is sport. Father Phelan never misses a game. Father Brennan, of St. Malachi, was a ball player when a young man, and has not got over his admiration for the sport. Alex. Mastbrook can always be found in the stand. Dr. Worthman is only prevented by the severe illness of a patient from being on hand. John D. Finney takes the game in. Mayor Ewing's smiling face is frequently seen in the crowd. Grif Prather goes out to three games out of four. R. Graham Frost is an habitual. John J. O'Neill is a regular. J. C. Ewald is an occasional. In fact the list might be prolonged to columns, for when it comes to going to base ball matches, "they will do it."

DOMESTIC PANTOMIME.

A Back Yard Exhibition Interpreted from a Passing Horse-Car.

From the Detroit Free Press.

One of the traces of the street-car horse broke, delaying the car for seven or eight minutes. Afar off to the right one could see into the back yard of a house, and directly the passengers on the car were gazing that way at a pantomime. A man on the car took it upon himself to explain what was occurring. He began:

"A woman and her husband appear at the back door. She is excited—he the picture of calmness."

It was so. The woman waved her arms and gesticulated—the man seemed to whistle.

"Now she leads him to a bedstead which she has been scalding," continued the passenger. "She is probably saying that she will smash it with the ax, and he is probably replying that she will have to sleep on the floor if she does. If I had time I'd advise her to use kerosene oil in the crevices, but I haven't."

The woman then led the man to a carpet hanging on the fence and waved her arms some more.

"She's telling him to pull off his coat and beat it," explained the passenger, "and he replies that he'll see the old thing burned first. No true wife will ever ask her husband to have anything to do with a carpet."

The two suddenly disappeared into the house, and the interpreter remarked:

"Hold on—this isn't the end! She's taken him in to show where she wants the kitchen stove moved to. There they come, and she is madder'n ever."

The actors reappeared and stood in the attitude of enemies about to begin a combat.

"She's saying that she rues the day she ever set eyes on him!" whispered the passenger. "She's calling him a loafer and a drunkard, and he's telling her to set the chimney afire and let the firemen do her house-cleaning. Whoa! there—she's flying off the handle! There! she's hit him with a bedstead slat! He staggers, but recovers and tries to grasp her! She whacks him again, and now he turns to flee. He reaches the fence, but she reaches him!"

Some of the passengers ran out upon the platform to get a clear view, but the interpreter climbed to the roof and continued:

"She has him down on an ash-heap! She's telling him that he has reached the end of his rope and has got to cut bait or fish. He struggles—she chokes him and jams his head into the ashes! Now he is quiet. Now she lets him up. Now he is walking towards the carpet with a stick. Ladies and gentlemen, the great moral exhibition is over and virtue and perseverance have won another glorious triumph!"

The Turkish Grocer.

From All the Year Round.

The Turkish grocer, conspicuous by his snow-white turban and his flowing beard, sits cross-legged on the high-raised floor of his shop, with a by no means distant background of canisters and bottles; with his scales suspended from the roof, and with all the materials of his trade close and ready to his hand. Usually a female friend or purchaser is also seated on the shop-board, but with her legs dependent in the street. Of course she wears a yashmak and feridjee, but a yashmak is no bar to oral conversation, and still less is it a bar to the language of the eyes, and conversation, of the one kind or the other, goes on for an indefinite time between the grocer and his visitor. When a veritable customer arrives the old Thurk does not trouble himself to remove the chibouque from his lips, but stretches out his hand to the required canister or bottle, draws down the scales from the roof, and supplies the article demanded. Sitting, as he does, a little above the faces of his customers, he looks down gravely and benevolently upon them and seems to say: "Look around, there are no dark corners in my shop; no sand can lurk undetected in the sugar which I present to you in the light of the blazing sun; nor could the insidious horse-bean, if I were to introduce it among the fragrant berries of Mocha, escape your penetrating gaze." The restaurateur's cook, as he stands behind his smoking pots and shining stew-pans, in like manner takes the entire crowd of spectators into his confidence, and defies them to mistake a rabbit, which he dissects before them, for a cat or a puppy. All the tradesmen and handicraftsmen seem to say to the intending purchasers: "Behold us! We are all fair and above board. You will find in us no untradesmanlike artifices. We lay bare to you all the arts and mysteries of our craft. Would you buy a yorghan (wadded quilt), you shall see us weigh out the cotton which it shall contain and you may watch us as we make it up, and judge for yourselves whether we are the men to connive at a surreptitious insertion of inferior material."

WOMEN AND WIGS.

How Art Comes in to Supply the Defects of Nature.

From the New York World.

A clever hair-dealer in this city says imported hair is much finer than the hair of native Americans, and explains the fact by saying that most of the human hair brought to this country is cut from the heads of the peasantry of Europe, who wear caps constantly, which keeps the hair smooth and clean. But there must be other reasons for this difference, such as climate and diet. For example, the American Indians have hair as coarse as straws, and there is a much greater infusion of Indian blood in the old American families than we, with our imperfect knowledge of and interest in genealogy, usually imagine. People with any taint of Indian blood are apt to have long, heavy heads of hair, and they, like Indians, keep theirs always. Who ever heard of a bald-headed Indian brave? Even a liberal supply of red-earth paint, sprinkled over the head instead of diamond powder, only serves as a hair tonic for the noble red man, while such treatment of the hair of a civilized human being would be worse than scalping. It is a great mistake to suppose that when once the hair has fallen it can never be restored. If taken in time and treated properly much can be done. Cold water is strengthening, and wise persons say the scalp should be taken in the hands and moved as much as possible. Ten and fifteen minutes are not too much to give to brushing the hair. And every good hair-dresser should understand the conditions of the scalp. Hair which is naturally very oily does not need, as a tonic, anything that is unctious in character, while hair which is very dry needs just such treatment. A lady in Philadelphia, who has achieved remarkable success in restoring the hair, has one tonic which she recommends in all cases. She examines the scalp thoroughly, and gives a prescription just as any physician would do. She has studied scalp diseases for years, and gives her entire time and attention to this practice. As simple and beneficial a tonic as one can use is made of quinine, bay-rum, tar-water, and a little glycerine. And surely with the hair one can not take too much trouble. American girls do not, like the peasants' daughters of Brittany, make merchandise of their tresses. No matter how poor they may be, and no matter how fine their hair may be, they cannot be induced to part with it. Short hair is not thought becoming to a woman, but the fashion of wearing it ought to come in every ten or fifteen years for the benefit it does the hair. English girls often contrive to look pretty with short hair, the London hair-dresses are so skillful in their management of it and in giving it what seems to be a natural curl. Instead of short curly bangs ending on the forehead they curl their hair all around the head in an antique fashion. The dreadful fashion of bleaching dark hair blonde is luckily going out and nature is again resuming her sway. Nothing can be more incongruous than a yellow head with the suspicion of a black mustache! Brunettes who are determined to make themselves blondes should bathe their faces as well as their heads, the wise affirm, with peroxide of hydrogen. There is an ashen blonde hair of the very lightest hue, so beautiful with dark eyes that a vain beauty my be pardoned for wearing such a wig if she has the wherewithal to buy it. But orange-colored hair is simply abominable, and should be seen nowhere except before the footlights. Perfectly white hair is the most expensive in the market. Last year a lady paid $900 for a white wig made of naturally curly hair. What is called the Thompson wave is quite as satisfactory as a wig. If made large enough it has the same effect and does not heat the head nearly so much. The patent spring underneath the wave makes it fit any head comfortably, and the wave is made of naturally wavy and curly hair, so that neither dampness nor perspiration will take out the crimps. One of the largest fortunes ever realized in America was made by the owner of an old-fashioned crimping-pin which a lady had patented in Washington, and now Mrs. Thompson bids fair to make another with her different patents. The woman who can invent material which will closely resemble the skin of the head will find millions awaiting her! Nature generally understands what is best when she gives a brunette black hair, and enlivens a very white skin with red locks, but in foreheads she really does seem to make mistakes, and by the judicious arrangement of hair a homely face can often be made pretty. The French speak of the "five points of beauty." When the hair is combed straight back from the face and grows in a point on the forehead they draw it to two other points in the center of the temples, and to still two others close to the ears, and contend that so embellished no woman, no matter how homely her features may be, can fail to be attractive. Be this as it may, many a woman owes her reputation as a beauty to her coiffure. A young lady in Washington, who was by no means a remarkable beauty, came out of a fever with a perfectly bald head. Her hair did not and would not grow. So finally she ordered from Paris three or four wigs of beautiful red gold, and these actually transformed her from a fright into a belle. The same thing may be observed on the stage, where an ordinary woman captures a whole parquet with a blonde wig. The largest wig ever made was made for Formes, the great basso. Rignold, too, had a large head. In making old men's wigs the hair of the yak or the Astrachan goats is used, both being cheaper than human hair. White hair will command almost any price, and is always expensive. The pure silver more so than the yellow white. Very pale blonde hair cut from the head will sometimes bleach white under a liberal supply of peroxide of hydrogen. But there never has been anything discovered to turn the hair white on a living head, and it should be understood that women who go to Paris and return with white hair wear cunning French wigs.

"REX MAGNUS"

(THE MIGHTY KING).

THE HUMISTON FOOD PRÉSERVATIVE.

Perfect in Work, Safe and Harmless, Economical.

DOES ALL THAT IS CLAIMED.

Rex Magnus is a perfect food preservative, and the only one ever discovered by man, which embodies at the same time healthfulness, cheapness, certainty of results, and general adaptability for the wants of all mankind. This preservative is, as its name signifies, a mighty king, a royal preservative, an invincible conqueror.

The Discoverer—A Benefactor.

This field has long demanded a combination and unifying, blending and happy harmonizing of elements, agencies and forces which has been heretofore unobtained. Men have sought for it, in all ages, and in all countries—and they have uniformly failed. Prof. R. F. Humiston was somewhat like Morse, Franklin, Fulton and others in their respective fields, the man and the only one, who was destined to wear the proud title of discoverer of this preparation and of a benefactor of his race.

35 DAYS' TEST.

REX MAGNUS has kept twenty-three kinds of Meats and other Food thirty-five days in a warm room (average 70°), and here is the testimony of the eminent scientific gentleman who had exclusive control of the experiment in his priv[illegible] laboratory, viz.: PROF. SA[illegible]L W. JOHNSON, OF YA[illegible] COLLEGE.

The [illegible]essor's report, dated March 7, '83, says: "M[illegible] of 35 days on meats, &c., bought in open market, have certainly been severe in daily mean temperature of 70°, and I am satisfied that the different brands of Rex Magnus, The Humiston Food Preservative, with which I have experimented, have accomplished all claimed for them. So far as I have yet learned, they are the only preparations that are effective, and at the same time practicable, for domestic use. At the banquet on 'treated' meats at the New Haven House I could not distinguish between those which had been sixteen days in my laboratory and those newly taken from the refrigerator of the hotel. The oysters were perfectly palatable and fresh to my taste, and better, as it happened, than those served at the same time, which were recently taken from the shell. The roast beef, steak, chicken, turkey and quail, were all as good as I have ever eaten."

Rex Magnus is safe, tasteless, pure, and Prof. Johnson adds in his report, "I should anticipate no ill results from its use and consider it less harmful than common salt."

Thousands of equally conclusive experiments in all parts of the country have brought the same good results.

Time is Conquered.

It is an unquestioned fact that all flesh food is improved by keeping, and as "Rex Magnus" will do this it at once becomes an important factor in every family, restaurant, hotel and market.

Cream Kept Fifty-Nine Days.

☞No fear of muggy days or bad weather after this. It is equally good in any climate. Cream has been put up in Boston and eaten in Italy forty-two days after, and in Switzerland fifty-nine days after in perfect condition. It works equally well with all kinds of food.

A Trial Will Prove It.

In these days of bombastical essays, some persons may call in question the statements made in reference to "Rex Magnus," and the wonderful results and benefits accomplished by its use. Our answer to all such persons is this, viz.: It will do all that is claimed for it, and a trial will prove this statement.

How to Get It.

A trifling expenditure on your part will establish this fact to your entire satisfaction. You do not have to buy a county right, nor a costly recipe; we sell neither the one nor the other.

Samples Mailed Postpaid.

We do offer, however, to supply you—in case your grocer, druggist or general storekeeper hasn't it on hand—with any brand of "Rex Magnuf" which you may desire, upon receipt of the price. We will prepay postage charges on sample packages. The several brands and their respective uses and functions are herewith mentioned as a guide to readers: (It will not do to use for anything else than designated, as long experience proves it to be necessary for different combinations.)

"IS IT A STORY?"

A Lady Contributor's Adventures in a Newspaper Office.

How She Faced the Managing Editor and what He Said to Her—The Waste-Paper Basket and the Tricks it Played—A Dialogue With a Young Man who Wore a Mustache—The Trouble of Getting into Print.

"Now it is finished." I draw a long breath and lean back in my chair. "I shall thrust it under the eyes of every editor in this city, and sit by in cold blood and see him read it. Let him pinch my vanity to pieces if needs be. No doubt I shall cry out; but then I shall have no proud-flesh about me that will grow into a pain and unsightliness."

Is it all aspiration, or inspiration? I will not turn that over in my mind another time. I have revolved and revolved and to no end. I will not be a senseless whirligig.

One thing or the other, give it up or go on. Shall I forever waste time and health, grow yellow and sour in a useless endeavor? I turn my head restlessly and look appealingly at the written pages; they are blank.

Leaving out the question of only doing it illy, making a lot of waste paper; it takes energy, love, charm from other things lying close at hand. One must not only eat and sleep, but be good and happy, and to earn them all is not done by fretting and working into the small hours of the night; shaking your fist, grinding your teeth, begrudging every half hour of time spent in what, too, has completeness, if worked at with full energy. Working at one thing with the buzz of other thoughts around, annoying, diverting, paining, pleasing, they whirl through one's mind, creep, tramp, tip softly round and round. They stir one up, make one feel awry. Ought one to follow their beck? Oh, thoughts, persistent, bitter, regretful ——

"Hang aspirations!" I come down on the four legs of my chair, and rub savagely at my inky fore-finger.

"Oh, time, how thou flyest:
False heart, how thou liest.
Leave chattering and fretting;
Betake thee to doing and getting."

"Is not that what I want to do, fairly ache to do, what I will do this very afternoon, go and see every paper in town? I will not send it. I believe that greedy waste-basket swallows half of them whole.

"Oh, dear! I wonder if that punctuation and paragraphing are all right. I hang over it anxiously.

There, I will not look at it again. I roll it up tight, throw it on the bed, and put the pillow over it, knowing perfectly well, if I leave it open on the table, I will be at it again the next minute

On my way down stairs I stop to get a good-luck kiss from my dainty, placid little mother. She sits by the window darning stockings. Such gaping, grinning, absurd looking heels I never saw. "Mamma, dear. I think it must be the way the boys take off their shoes that makes those holes so enormously large, don't you?" I rest my cheek for a moment against her pretty hair. "Whose stocking is that?" my eyes catching sight of a heel adorned with sundry, sewed-up holes and crooked darns. "I know well enough whose it is. Mamma, you shall not. I ought to be helping you this minute with the boys' sockings, let alone your bothering with mine. You shall not, that is all."

She looks up into my face with charming fondness.

"I think I have more faith in that than you have, dear." She takes it, tucking in the ends of the wrapper neatly. I fling myself on my knees beside her and hug her tight. "You untidy child, the top of your hat is full of dust." She brushes it off with the stocking, and curls my widow locks around her finger. I feel her caress on my heart. If courage had been drawing back, baiking, I whipped it up, nagged it on with the thought of my mother doing many irksome duties for me, her hope in me; and my growing snappish, untidy, disappointing, out of youth, out of grace.

How one grows into the meanings of words. They press upon one heavy and strong. They become alive. We start back, are frightened at their powerful, pitiless faces, would shrink to the wall, and find a horizon there, narrow, close against the eyeballs dark, but they hunt us out. But beside them, cheek by jole, stand words of vivider joy beckoning, and we press through, with a kind of breathless triumph, to a rest; a dropping of one's head down, a falling apart of hands clasped tight, a slackening of tense nerves, a lull of thought, a rest, bought and paid for.

Feeling immensely brave, with a kind of heart for any fate, I climb the stairs, open the door on which there is a blue placard, reading: "Editorial rooms," and ask for the editor by name. A pretty young man, with sharp features and a mustache, steps forward. "He is not in."

Another young man with a mustache has occasion to turn around in his revolving chair, and they both stare at me.

"Do you want to see the managing editor?"

"I guess so; yes sir," I try to speak confidently, but say it at a venture, not knowing if the one I had asked for or one of the men before me was the managing editor.

"Have you a contribution?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is it a story?"

"No, sir."

"The managing editor is not in; you can leave it for him."

I feel reluctant. "You can write a note and leave with it," says the first young man, smiling sweetly and pushing an inkstand towards me.

Another young man with a mustache comes out of an inner room, and they all stare at me. I am seized with a sudden cold fit.

"No, thank you, I will call again."

I turn to go; am nearly safely out, when a villainous nail catches me by the flounce. I hear a heart-rending crash of stitches and see a half-yard of my flounce lying on the floor.

"Here are some pins, Miss, to repair damages," says one of the young gentlemen, stepping forward with an ill-suppressed smile.

"No, thank you." I catch up my torn garment, and, without looking behind me, stalk grimly out of the door.

"Oh dear! oh darn it!" I say hotly, when in the hall, and look over my shoulder with a kind of defiant terror. It is an ugly word—a regular cuss-word, I suppose, and very shocking, but it does come so very pat; quite jumps out of one's mouth when one is overwrought; and, there is no use talking, it is comforting.

My spirits are a little dashed. It is all those young men's fault, and that nail. The piece has not been even looked at yet. I hate young men with mustaches. They make one feel so conscious of one's self; so sure to fall into awkwardness or affectation. But the piece has not been read, and there is not the least reason to feel discouraged.

Yet, I quake inwardly as I step into the next newspaper office and ask for the editor. I expect to be directed to somewhere upstairs, but the clerk looks blandly at me for a moment, and says:

"Anything important, Miss?"

"Yes; I would like to see him if you please." He considers a moment, then goes out a side door.

I stand by the counter waiting, trembling; am terribly tempted to slip out of the door, go home, be done with it all; to shut this piece, face down, in the lower drawer, where there are plenty of others. The side door opens, the clerk appears, followed by—I feel it in my bones—the editor, whose sharp eyes fall upon me inquiringly.

"Did you want to see me?"

"Yes, sir; I brought this, a piece for the paper." I look down nervously at my bundle, and change it from one hand to the other.

"A story, miss?" he says, drumming on the counter with fat, prosperous fingers, and looking sharply at me.

"No, sir."

"A sketch?"

"Yes, sir." I hand it to him, but he still drums on the counter.

"We don't take such contributions; we only copy from Eastern papers."

"Yes, sir." I draw in my hand, and feel presumptuous. "I didn't know. Good afternoon."

"Good day."

He still drums on the counter and looks at me. I hear the sharp rap-a-tap, and feel his eyes on my back, all the way to the door, which I reach with the crushing sense of having made a poor figure.

Well, he did not look at the piece. I have no reason yet to feel discouraged, I think, catching my breath when in the street, and feeling light-headed; but I must run back and try again. It was all over so quickly. The afternoon has grown cloudy, dismal, unfriendly.

Perhaps I had better have written a story, I think ruefully. That seems the first thing they ask, but not so much because they want a story, as they rather expect nothing else, and that hardly worth looking at, from a young woman. She may have a tender heart, a pretty fancy.

Girls, trust to these, stand by these; bend your head, steady your nerves, plough, plant; that tender heart will grow into a broad benevolence; that pretty fancy into the dignity of imagination, into a strong discerning power, not an unreal, exaggerated expression of things, but into an intense inward knowing of things, which freshened, fed by experience, grows, develops, ends not where? But my! how one must plow, plant, weed, and, girls, don't mind the sweat and the tan; for after all, it brings a vigor, a richer beauty, if that is what we are after.

I stand before the next editor; he takes the piece, unwraps it, is reading it, glancing at it, skimming through the first few pages, turning over the rest, hands it back to me.

"It is rather lengthy, I hardly think we could find room for such an article." He bows; takes up another manuscript from his desk.

I AM DISMISSED.

I creep down the steps, with a heart so heavy I think it must have turned to stone

It is drizzling rain. The afternoon has become baleful. I don't care if I get soaking wet, and my best dress and hat are just ruined. I won't catch up my skirts. Let them take care of themselves, I made them short enough. I don't try to keep my heels out of the mud, but tramp over the crossing with desperate flat-footedness. It has been looked at, called nothing but lengthy (I detest that word) and returned to me. "You have reason to feel discouraged now. I pity you," I walk down the street, thinking aimlessly.

Only a few mornings ago, a sweet, dustless, windless spring morning; yesterday's dust lying in mud in the streets; yesterday's rough winds having blown themselves away; the spry young grass lifts itself up strongly; the sun, broad, plentiful, falls in every nook and corner, reviving, coaxing out little modest weeds, that look so charming, so promising in their tender green. One feels of a piece with the morning, and even at the risk of being late, cannot resist walking down, cannot crowd onesself into a car and take somebody's seat, who gives it up with such niggardly grace. You only take it, fearing he will look even more sulky and abused if you refuse it. Making yourself as small as possible, sitting on the very edge of the seat, feeling very depreciatory, you have not the face to take out your own paper, read and look comfortable. I dare say if I had to, or felt I ought to give up my seat, I would ram my paper in my pocket and look sulky too; but I don't think it a pretty or engaging way to do. So, on this particularly nice morning, when I see the crowded car go by, I give a little skip of delight. The morning is irresistible. It gives one an irrepressible vivacity of heart and heel. But there is a figure out of harmony, that lags along in front of me. A woman, lank, flat (I don't believe a woman could look spirited, or any thing but out of spirit, without a bustle in these days of bustle), shabby, down at the heels, the flaps of her cloak pockets loose, hanging out of place, yesterday's dust still in the seams of her cloak and the pleats of her flounce; her hair ill-kempt, rough, untidy, ends sticking out; bonnet awry, a plume out of curl, wagging forlornly as she walks; gloves without buttons and ripped at the fingers. As I pass I look into her face. She is young, hardly thirty. All the features droop. There is not one upward curve. All a sad and weary droop, like her clothes; a gray, crumpled veil seems to rest on her face like a shadow, wrapping her around.

It all, clear cut with life, comes before me as I walk down the street in the slow drizzle. I can see her, can half feel all the sadness, all the weariness, the hope that had worn into that slovenliness; a giving up of one thing after the other until even sadness and weariness and unfeeling. To live over half of life with all the fillip out of it, all the crispness and keenness dropped from it, I wince at the thought, clutch determinately at the remnant of courage, gather it up, hold it tight, and start for the next newspaper office.

I go slowly up the step, fairly drag myself up, wishing they would reach to eternity, and that there was no such place as editorial rooms at the end. All too soon I stand before the closed door. It is too much. The spirit is strong, but the flesh is weak. I turn on my heels, get nimbly down again, and lean against the banister with a sick heart. I think I will give it up. The roll in my hand stands on end, and stares me in the face. Oh dear! I don't know, though, why I should feel so meek, have such a hang-dog air. They do, every last one of them, publish trash, and plenty of stupidly, told things. I seize my manuscript, or it seizes me. We mount the steps, open the door. Another one of those lightish-brown mustached, pretty young men steps toward me. I look at him sharply. I was in that state of fierceness, that I do believe, if I had found the shadow of a smile lurking in his face, I should have boxed him, but he stood before me quite grave.

"I brought this piece for the paper."

"Is it a story?" I feel a spasm of a laugh in my throat.

"No, sir."

"The managing editor, I guess, is the person you wish to see."

At this another gentleman steps forward. My balance has been slipping away from me. What avails a frantic grab? I fall into a state of topsy-turvyness, head over heelness. The words that I had made ready stick to my lips, and I can only put the manuscript into his hands quite dumbly. He shows me into an inner room, points to a chair, seats himself at a desk and begins to read. My eyes fall on the waste-basket by his desk. "Oh, you open-mouthed, greedy, hope-devouring, insatiable thing!" and I shake my fist at it. It gapes at me insolently, and looks expectantly, like a dog waiting for a bone, at the paper in the editor's hands.

"I will circumvent you yet, you see," and I was that exasperated that had I been near enough I should have upset it. "I see this has literary merit." I start, start almost out of my skin, as I hear the words. He merely remarks it, and goes on reading. The revulsion from despair to something like hope is so sudden and sharp. I feel my face twist up, and the tears spring to my eyes, followed by a hurried anxiety to get them out of sight without being seen. I had just made as small as possible, and was slipping it up to my eyes, when—"This is something that will interest the ladies."

Up looks the editor; my hands drop, my head jerks forward, down splash the two tears shamefully into my lap. But his glance goes over my head, as if he expected it to fall on the face of a taller person, but it did not matter, the top of the hat would do. I was seized with the absurdity of it, and coughed to drown a giggle.

He turns over the pages, glances here and there. Oh, for some power to direct his gaze! If it would only fall on that, on that, and not some hooked-together part. I devour his face. What does that impatient pucker in his eyebrow mean? He turns to the end. I close my fists tight, and fetch my breath slow. He has turned back to the beginning. The pucker is something out. Hope rises rampant, I dart a triumphant look at the waste-basket.

"It is rather long; such long articles rather repel readers than attract them. Newspapers are not the place for literature. We have hardly room for it."

Hope falls fleet. The waste-basket grins maliciously, and smacks its lips. But he did not say lengthy, making one feel that one has been long-winded, verbose, sprawling. I catch at one toppling hope.

He reads a little more and then says, laying it aside on the table:

"I think I will take this for the Saturday supplement, but call again, I have not time to read it all now."

I came within an ace of flying at him and hissing him, but got decorously out into the hall some way; and then I clapped my palms sharply together, while painless tears ran over my cheeks. Hope, ambition, joy grew absurdly wild.

It is raining quite hard in the streets. I spread my handkerchief over my hat, catch up my skirts carefully, keep my heels well make myself as small as possible and hug the narrow shelter of the inner sidewalk. I am again anxious about my clothes and see fine weather to come and the homeliness of bedraggled, rumpled skirts, and a sulky weather-beaten hat on a clean, smiling day.

So I got into print. And who knows, I thought in the pride of my heart that day, as I dodged the rain and felt so uncommonly gay and puffed up, but that in course of time I will have that august body, editors, at my feet; for hand in hand, with strong, faithful industry, with energy worked to the bone, what lies not before one?

A LOVERS' QUARREL.

Thrilling Scene Between Natalie McIntosh and George W. Simpson.

From the Chicago Tribune.

"Tie up the dog."

The tender gray twilight of a June evening was settling down upon the earth as Natalie McIntosh spoke these words, and as she threw a light shawl over her pretty white shoulders whose rounded curves and soft flesh tints contrasted so well with the brilliant colors of the garment, and stepped out upon the lawn, where the star-eyed pansies and modest pinks were rearing their heads alongside the velvety green of the close-trimmed grass-plot that stretched away to the westward, the picture was indeed a pretty one. Passing through the flower-beds and down the graveled walk until she came to a clump of willows, whose light branches were just stirred by the whisper of the night that came from the south, the girl paused and stood there peering wistfully into the gleaming. Brushing away with her dimpled hand the fluffy mass of golden hair that the sighing wind had blown over her white forehead, Natalie drew the shawl closely round her and sat down on the little rustic bench, whose cosy look made it a fit place indeed for love's tryst and vigil.

Presently George W. Simpson entered the gate, and was soon by her side. For an instant no word was spoken between them, and as they stood there, her arms about his neck, her head upon his shoulder, Natalie felt that without the love of this man her life would be a starless blank. Hers was a deep, trusting, if-the-rope-breaks-we-are-gone love that made her voice falter and die away when she spoke to George about it, and yet back of it all there was ever a nameless fear, a vague terror, that seemed to rise like a black pall from out the mystic dreamland that was part of her very nature and tinged the brightest and happiest moments of her life with a sense of melancholy.

"You love me?" she asked, looking up to George with eyes in which there shone the radiance of a tender, beautiful passion; "love me better than all the world beside; better than you have ever loved any one in your whole life?"

George did not answer, for as Natalie spoke there came to him a haunting memory of dark, splendid eyes, a bright face, smiling and radiant and dimpled and dewy, scarlet lips that had often met his own in sweet, clinging, don't-let-go-if-you-value-your-life kisses. He thought of all this as he bent tenderly over Natalie, her golden hair touching his cheek, and the perfume from the lilies she wore mingling with his breath.

The girl noticed his silence. "Why do you not answer me?" she said.

George did not reply, but, drawing her still closer to him, would have kissed her again.

"I want no kisses!" she exclaimed passionately withdrawing herself from his arms, "from lips that are not sacred to me alone. I have given you all that a woman can give—the love of her whole nature. My heart has been a lute for you to play upon, my whole existence a constant striving to make my love for you a holy and beautiful and pure one. For your sake I have looked renunciation in the fact with tearless eyes, have given up much that is dear to me, and yet when I asked you if you love me there comes no answer from your lips, and your eyes do not look into mine"—and drawing herself up in the imperious, whoa-Emma way that befitted her so well she sat down on the rustic bench with a dull, sickening thud that told all too plainly of a broken bustle.

In an instant George was by her side and Natalie was sobbing as if her heart would break. "Forgive me, darling," he murmured in low, buck-beer tones.

"I do," Natalie replied; "but tell me truly, did you ever love another?"

"Do not ask me that," said George.

"But I demand an answer," exclaimed the girl passionately, "and again ask you if you ever loved another."

"I did," he replies. "Loved her wildly, madly."

"Who was it?" she asks, her cheeks aflame with the hot flush of anger.

Bending low over her, George whispers into her left ear the fatal words: "Lydia Pinkham!" and with a hollow, mocking laugh flees into the darkness.

SOUTHERN CHIVALRY.

The Harm Scott's Novels Have Done the Southern People.

In Mark Twain's new book "Life on the Mississippi," there is a charming account of New Orleans of to-day and its life. The general aspect of the city remained unchanged, but it had become the best lighted city in the country, and a great improvement in its journalism was remarked. He praises the strong, compact, direct, unflowery style of the New Orleans editor, but criticises the reporter, quoting, for example, the following from an account of a river trip:

"On Saturday, early in the morning, the beauty of the place graced our cabin, and proud of her fair freight the gallant little boat glided up the bayou."

"Twenty-two words to say the ladies came aboard and the boat shoved up the creek is a clean waste of ten good words, and is also destructive of compactness of statement. The trouble with the Southern reporters is—women. They unsettle him; they throw him off his balance. He is plain and sensible and satisfactory until a woman heaves in sight. Then he goes all to pieces; his mind totters, he becomes flowery and idiotic. From reading the above extract, you would imagine that this student of Sir Walter Scott is an apprentice, and knows next to nothing about handling a pen. On the contrary, he furnishes plenty of proofs in his long letter that he knows well enough how to handle it when the women are not around to give him the artificial flower complaint."

"Southern chivalry" does not find much favor at the author's hands, and he lays the blame at the door of Sir Walter Scott. He speaks of the awakening of the world to freedom by the French Revolution, and goes on: "Then comes Sir Walter Scott with his enchantments, and by his single might checks this wave of progress, and even turns it backs; sets the world in love with dreams and phantoms; with decayed and swinish forms of religion; with decayed and degraded systems of government; with the sillinesses and emptinesses, sham grandeurs, sham gauds and sham chivalries of a brainless and worthless long vanished society. He did measureless harm; more real and lasting harm, perhaps, than any other individual that ever wrote. Most of the world has now outlived these harms, though by no means all of them; but in our South they flourish pretty forcefully still. * * * But for the Sir Walter disease the character of the Southerner—or Southron, according to Sir Walter's starchier way of phrasing it—would be wholly modern, in place of modern and mediæval mixed, and the South would be fully a generation further advanced than it is. It was Sir Walter who made every gentleman in the South a Major or a Colonel, or a General, or a Judge before the war; and it was he, also, who made these gentlemen value these bogus decorations. For it was he that created rank and caste down there, and also reverence for rank and caste and pride and pleasure in them. Enough is laid on slavery without fathering upon it these creations and contributions of Sir Walter. * * * A curious exemplification of the power of a single book for good or harm is shown in the effects wrought by Don Quixote and those wrought by Ivanhoe. The first swept the world's admiration for the mediæval chivalry silliness out of existence, and the other rostored it. As far as our South is concerned the good work done by Cervantes is pretty nearly a dead letter, so effectually has Scott's pernicious work undermined it.

From the New York Times.

Four out of every five persons who wear glasses wear eye-glasses. The fifth wears spectacles. Ninety-nine in every hundred who consult either oculist or optician are advised to wear spectacles. As a rule, four-fifths of them refuse to accept the advice given. The only reason given is that eye-glasses look more stylish than spectacles. The reason given is that "the glasses fit my eyes better than any spectacles I could find." Some foolish young ladies and gentlemen adopt eye-glasses because they think it gives them a distingue appearance. Their use gives the bearer an opportunity to attach to the costume a bit of jewelry they could not otherwise sport—a delicate gold chain, which may be worn so that the ear is made a resting-place for the connecting link between eye-glass and vest or dress. With this class the eye-glass is of no earthly use, except as a means of injuring the eye. Such glasses have no magnifying power, and are as valueless to the weak or deformed eye as the single eye-glass. Single eye-glasses are worn only by Englishmen, Anglomaniacs and idiots. The party who wears one—it is always a man—may be at once set down as a snob. There will be no mistake. As a few "men about town" wear the single eye-glass, and a few actors wear them on the stage, they have attained a certain amount of popularity, mainly among the classes mentioned. The idiots include the "dudes." So popular have eye-glasses become among those who are compelled to wear glasses to aid defective sight that the use of spectacles is confined mainly to elderly people and to boys and girls. The fact that young children who are troubled with affections of the eye invariably wear spectacles is known to every observing man. The fact carries with it a lesson. That is that the child does what the oculist tells it or its parents to do. The person of maturer years, unless he or she is blessed with an unusual quantity of common sense, doesn't follow instructions. He or she generally disregards orders and wears the eye-glasses instead of spectacles. Fashion's decrees that the former are the more stylish overrule advice of oculist or physician. The advice is given because the spectacle is very much better in every way for the person afflicted with any disease of the eye. They are easier to wear and do not injure the nose in any way, which the pinching of the eye-glass frame does sometimes. The frame of the spectacle is desirable because it holds the glass firmly in its place. The eye-glass is in a constant state of unrest. As a result, particularly where the glass is either a double convex or double concave lens, the magnifying power is constantly varying. The variation is slight, to be sure, but it exists to a sufficient degree to cause injury to the eye. That is one of the reasons why people who wear eye-glasses find it necessary to purchase new glasses of constantly increasing power. They generally ascribe the result to old age. It isn't advance in years so much as it is eye-glasses that causes the trouble.

SONNET UNTO A BAREFOOT BOY.

The barefoot boy! I mark him at his play—
For May is here once more, and so is he—
His dusty trousers, rolled half to the knee,
And his bare ankles, dirty, too, as they;
Cross-hatchings of the nettle, in array
Of feverish stripes, hint vividly to me
Of woody pathways winding endlessly
Along the creek, where even yesterday
He plunged his shrinking body—gasped and shook;
Yet called the water "warm," with never lack
Of joy. And so half-enviously I look
Upon this graceless barefoot and his track—
His toe stubbed—aye, his big toe-nail knocked back
Like unto the clasp of an old pocket-book.

THE MISSING PAPER.

One of the most singular cases which are to be found in the police records of bloody deeds committed in Paris is that of Mme. Roquelaire, who was murdered in her residence, 17 Rue Danton, on the night of the 15th of June, 1873.

The last that was seen of her alive was at nine o'clock in the evening by one of her servants, to whom she gave an order concerning his service on the following morning, which indicated that she and M. Jean Beauchamp, her lover, were about retiring.

The servant, as he testified at the preliminary examination, saw, as he stood on the threshold of the door leading from the hall into the saloon. Mme. Roquelaire in her dressing-gown and her toilet arranged for the night; he also saw M. Jean making a cigarette and reclining, his face toward the door, in an easy chair. Monsieur was frowning and seemed angry, although he said nothing. Evidently he and madame had been quarreling.

The last that was heard of her alive was at eleven o'clock, by her maid, who, having the privilege of absence for the evening, was passing through the hall toward the staircase leading up to the servants' quarters.

Then she was entreating Beauchamp to forgive her. He had evidently accused her of some offense—"perhaps," said the maid, "of infidelity." The girl paused and listened for a moment.

Then she heard M. Beauchamp—and "his anger was terrible; his words fierce and threatening," and then she heard madame exclaim:

"Strike me, coward! I have sacrificed everything—honor, position, friends—for you. Strike me; kill me! You have had everything else from me that I could give; now take the last, and now—mon dieu!—the most worthless of my pessessions—my life! You seek the excuse to be rid of me. You have found a new love. I read it all. Every day's life for the past three months has been to me turning over a new leaf in the revelation of your nature. I have nothing to live for. Kill me, coward!"

The maid, trembling and frightened, passed on. She also added in her statement: They have often, but not so violently, quarreled while she had been in their service. Early next morning the servants, three in number, met as usual in the kitchen. The man-servant, who was also M. Beauchamp's valet, named Francois, and the maid-servant narrated to each other what they had seen and heard on the previous evening.

Francois then at nine o'clock went up stairs and knocked as usual, at the solon door, to receive monsieur's orders. There was no sound within. Only the echoes of his tapping on the door.

According to his testimony, madame usually slept late; monsieur was always in dressing-gown and slippers and in the salon reading the Moniteur, which was laid at his door, never later than eight. Sometimes he rang for the valet before nine; sometimes awaited his coming.

An hour longer, and then finding, no signs of life within, the valet ran out and summoned a sergeant-de-ville, who burst in the door.

An appalling spectacle fixed the gaze of the little group gathered on the threshold of that chamber, and held them motionless as if they had been suddenly transformed into stone images.

There, nearly in the center of the floor in her night robes, Madame Roquelaire's body, looking like a mass of congealed blood. The white linen robe with its lace work and embroidery resembled a crimson shroud. The face was mutilated, crushed almost out of human shape.

The terrified maid-servant uttered a shriek of horror and fell to the floor, unconscious. Even for the moment the sergeant-de-ville, inured as he was to scenes of murder, was for an instant awe-stricken by the ghastly sight. Then, recovering himself, he started away, and in half an hour returned with other officers, the Commissaire and a surgeon.

Examination showed that the woman had been literally pounded to death with some blunt, heavy weapon, stamped on, and her body and limbs mashed almost into the semblance of pulp. Near this tremendous horror was a blood-stained scrap of paper—a portion of a sheet of note paper. One scrutiny revealed scrawled upon it, as with a blunt-pointed pencil, these words: "Your life was mine. I have taken what is mine. You are now in the arms of death, a more steadfast lover than you had living; one you can not betray. JEAN."

Over this pencil scrawl were two finger marks in blood in the form of a cross.

This was all. Nothing was disturbed. Madame's apparel was in its usual place; her jewelry, watch and bijouterie where she had placed them when undressing. No weapon was found. There were gory finger-marks on the door and its casing.

But Monsieur Beauchamp, what of him? Search showed that a small traveling valise was missing from his chamber; that he had changed his clothes, taking the discarded suit with him. On going out he had evidently locked the door of the salon and taken the key with him.

Specimens of his writing were found, and an expert declared that the pencil scrawl upon the blood-stained paper very closely resembled his method of writing, changed, of course, by the action of a terrible mental excitement upon his nerves.

There was no doubt, in the minds of the officials that he, in a fit of ungoverable rage, and possibly crazed by jealousy, had committed the fearful crime, and then, recovering his reason, had sought safety in flight. Two of the most expert detectives from the Prefect's office were soon on his trail. They traced him to Marseilles, thence to Bordeaux, where he took a sudden change of route and went to London.

Here he was arrested and brought back to Paris.

When informed of the crime of which he was accused he fell into a species of stupor, and for three days was apparently unconscious.

Recovering, he alternated from protestations of innocence to bewailing the death, as he asserted, of the only woman he ever loved, and calling upon Heaven to pursue with its direst torments her murderer.

Gradually he became calmer, and at last was able to make an intelligible statement. It was to this effect: He had quarreled with Madame Roquelaire on the evening ofher assassination. They had often had similar lovers' disagreements. She had a terrible temper, but her anger seldom lasted beyond the hour.

"On this night I had playfully accused her of liking some one else better than myself.

"She retorted; words made words, and still in jest I said I would correct her—shaking a large closed fan at her with a pretense of rage.

"Finally, she grew so violent that I dressed myself, put on my hat, and taking out my valise, I bade her good-night, left the house, and started upon a trip to Bordeaux, which I had long been contemplating, and intended to come to her immediately upon my return. We had separated in like manner before that. After a day or two we always came together again, and we were devoted to each other.

"I am not a brute; I was her best friend—she loved me, and would have died for me. Why, then, should I have killed her; beaten her to death so cruelly, whom I so often caressed?"

M. Beauchamp's story was not believed. It is not in the creed of the police to believe anything an accused party may assert.

Mme. Roquelaire was buried, the house locked up, put under seal and guarded day and night by a sergeant-de-ville.

The servants were subjected to close surveillance in order to retain them as witnesses in the trial of their master.

The conviction of Beauchamp was regarded as a foregone conclusion.

Mons. Jean Beauchamp's antecedents were those of a man with a moderate income; a man little known in society; rarely seen at the theaters or other places of public resort; reticent as to himself or his affairs, and, in fact, by the few with whom he sought occasional companionship, looked upon as a sort of genteel, well-dressed syhynx.

In two days the trial of M. Beauchamp approached its conclusion. He had for his advocate one of the shrewdest members of the French bar, and for whose ability the court and the Procureur d'Etat had the greatest respect.

The last witness had been heard, the State Counsel had made his first plea, when a messenger entered the court-room, pushed his way to the counsel for M. Beauchamp and gave him a package, whispered a moment to him and departed. A French advocate is nothing if not dramatic. The advocate arose, opened the packet, took from it a copy of the Moniteur, unfolded it, and addressing the Judge, said:

"I think that this trial can now have but one result—that of the release of M. Beauchamp. I have but three new witnesses to offer. One is a few lines in this paper, the Moniteur, bearing date June 14, 1873, one day before the murder of Mme. Roquelaire. I will read them:

"'Escaped from the private Maison de Sante of Dr. Roguet d'Allaire, a patient accepted and registered as Jean Boudinot, insane from jealousy; placed in the asylum by his wife, Mme. Matilde Boudinot, May 11, 1871, as incurably insane and violent; height five feet ten inches; powerfully built, brown hair, scar on cheek; was clad at time of escape in dark, close suit.'

"This notice," continued the advocate, "I offer in evidence."

"But what has this to do with the accused or the crime?" asked the Procureur.

"We shall see. I now call Dr. Allaire."

Dr. Alaire came to the witness chair. He stated that Boudinot, the escaped lunatic, imagined he had a mission to kill his wife for her infidelity. He had sworn to do it and he would.

"Where is Mme. Boudinot?"

"Until to-day I did not know what had become of her. She sent her payments regularly for the custody of her husband, but after the three first months never again visited the asylum. She removed from the Rue Livaudais, No. 47, where she had resided, and all trace of her was lost."

"What sort of woman—I mean what sort of age and appearance?"

"About twenty-five. Here is a photograph, in this velvet case, which was left with her husband, and which we took away from him, as the sight of it seemed to increase his fury in his intervals of delirium."

The advocate took it from the doctor and handed it to to the Procureur.

"Compare that with the portrait of Mam. Roquelaire found in the house of M. Beauchamp."

"It is the portrait of Mad. Roquelaire," involuntarily exclaimed the Procureur.

"Presisely," said the advocate. "Now, theo, I call my third witness, Pierre Rosier, sergeant-de-ville, until this morning on duty guarding the house of M. Beauchamp, in which the murder was committed."

Pierre Rosier stood up and said, in answer to the advocate's question:

"Two days past the passers-by on the opposite side have reported that the house was haunted. One man told me he had seen a frightful face at the upper windows, which came and disappeared. Yesterday afternoon I notified my relief of these strange reports. With the consent of the Commissaire, we entered the house and searched floor after floor We reached the cellar, and were about leaving it, when we heard a scratching sound at the rear of the dark underground chamber. Turning our lamps in the direction whence the sound came, we saw, huddled up in a corner, a terrible-looking object. It was a man, with a fierce, haggard face. He sprang up, but not so quickly that we did not throw ourselves upon him, bear him to the ground, and secure him before he could recover from his surprise. We called for assistance and conveyed him to the Commissaire's office, taking with us the club, a very heavy piece of wood resembling the larger end of a billiard cue. This weapon was covered with clots of blood and fragments of dried flesh. The man was evidently very nearly famished."

"Who did this man prove to be?"

"This morning the Commissaire ascertained that he was Jean Boudinot, the escaped lunatic."

"Did he speak or answer the Commissaire's interrogations?"

"Yes. He said he had killed his wife, and had danced the devil's jig upon her body. The only things we found upon his person were this bit of paper and a bit of a pencil, both stained with blood."

"This piece of paper," said the advocate, holding it up, "exactly fits the written paper from which it was torn, found in the blood near the body. This is the pencil.

"There remains now but one more statement necessary. That is mine. I promised the accused, my client, not to reveal his secret unless it was absolutely necessary. It is now necessary as the finale of this case.

"Mme. Boudinot was Mme. Roquelaire. After her husband was incarcerated in the Maison de Sante, through his having several times attempted her life, she became acquainted with M. Jean Beauchamp. They became intimate, in fact, loved each other devotedly. In order to avoid complications, she removed from her former residence in the Ru de Liovaudais to the hoose which M. Beauchamp had rented for their joint occupancy. There they lived. There, on the night of the 15th of June, after Mr. Beauchamp had gone out, she was murdered by the escaped lunatic, her husband, who, by what strange means we shall probably never ascertain, had traced her, and with all the cunning of the crazed, had concealed himself in the house, watched his chance, and then springing upon her, beat her, mangled her, as she was found—then with devilish glee hid himself in the cellar—and after betrayed himself by appearing at the windows. This is our case."

M. Beauchamp was released.

Gilfillan's Kick.

From the Chicago Times.

Mr. Gilfillan resigned the treasuryship of the United States to accept a position with a New York financial establishment. Within a month he had resigned from the latter institution for reasons that were not at the time made clear to the public. It is now stated, however, that the company with which Mr. Gilfillan connected himself was virtually organized to float the Texas bonds of the Farwell syndicate, and the following is alleged as the cause of his resignation: "The Farwell syndicate wanted to place their bonds secured by the grant of Texas lands, but the title to some portions of the lands was disputed by the owners of a Mexican grant. Finding this to be the case, Mr. Gilfillan declined to certify the loan as clear and undisputed, and being pressed to do this by the company became indignant, at once resigned, and was followed by Messrs. Boutwell and Windom."

A GIRL NIHILIST.

The Romantic Story Brought Out at the Recent Trial in St. Petersburg.

From the New York Sun.

On the very eve of the Czar's coronation seventeen members of the Russian Social-Revolutionary party have just been tried in this city, and in Odessa twenty-six members of the same party are now on trial.

All the seventeen men and women were proved to be Terrorists, and were condemned for various criminal acts committed in the last five years. So it seems that these men and women for five years successfully evaded all the snares of the police. The same holds true of hundreds of other Nihilists. What an encouraging demonstration of the efficiency of the Czar's police.

This Nihilist trial, like former ones, had its romance. Last year Michael Grachevsky, a Terrorist, was ordered by the Executive Committee to establish a technological school wherein Nihilists should be taught to manufacture explosives and make bombs. He persuaded a successful veterinary surgeon, Alexander Pribyleff, and his intended bride, Miss Raissa Grossman, to rent a separate house for him. In order to accommodate the Nihilists, the surgeon and his bride hurried up their wedding. In their new house they received from their friends many queer wedding-presents, such as bottles of nitro-glycerine, boxes of dynamite, electric-batteries, and the like. The committee sent them the daughter of a priest, Mary Youshkoff, as an "experienced cook." Besides attending to the gastronomic needs of the family, she had to wash nitro-glycerine. Thus the Pribyleffs began their married life. They had a small circle of selected friends, among whom were Prof. Grachevsky, who delivered lectures in their house on explosive machines and bombs, with "demonstrations;" Lieutenant of the Imperial Navy Alexander Butzevitch, a specialist on mines; Michael Klimenko, a Terrorist, who ran away from the Siberian mines; Miss Christine Grinberg, and Mrs. Anna Korba, who proved successful students in the chemistry of dynamite.

When the house of the Pribyleffs was entered by the police, a laboratory was discovered in perfect working order. There was an ample supply of glycerine, sulphuric acid, pyroxiline, three demijohns full of nitro-glycerine, and so on. But the attention of the Czar's detectives was nailed to some queer-looking tin boxes, which proved to be bombs ready for use. They were found to be a decided improvement on the one by which the late Czar was killed. They were made in the shape of square, flat boxes with a cover, and were said to be very convenient to carry concealed in the clothing. The former Nihilist bombs could not be conveniently carried about the person, and had to be carried in the hands wrapped up in a handkerchief or paper. On the Czar's day the Ivans usually throw up their caps. At the coronation festivies there will be a veritable cloud of caps thrown up. Now, who can guarantee that some of those caps shall not be bombs in disguise? And this is what is now greatly worrying the Coronation Committee. The gendarme officers suggest that at Moscow the Ivans shall be kept so far away from the Czar that he shall be out of reach of their caps. But everybody who knows Moscow is aware that such a plan would be impracticable. And so far his Majesty, instead of being cheered by the caps, will tremble at their very shadow.

Grachevsky and the daughter of a priest, Prascovia Ivanovsky, were arrested under the assumed names of Burgher Prishibin and wife. In their rooms were found nine jars filled with black dynamite, several bombs of the old style, a grenade charged with gunpowder and grape-shot, pistols, daggers, and poisons and a printing press. Miss Prascovia told the court that she was a member of the Executive Committee. This simple declaration caused a sensation among the highest dignitaries of the empire, who were present in the court. Miss Prascovia is of small stature, pale-faced, and of delicate health. Her hands look like those of a baby. Yet her hand signed the orders which convulsed the huge empire of the autocrats and paralyzed a score of regiments of the giant-like Imperial Guards. A tiny girl at the head of a score of Nihilist agents on one side, and Alexander III., a Goliath of seven feet, at the head of an army of a million strong, on the other—which of these shunned the battlefield? Upon that girl they have already placed chains whose weight is greater than her own, but the Czar will get a golden crown, that is, provided some of the agents of Prascovia do not spoil the ceremony. But "fools are lucky," says a Russian adage.

Upon arresting Ivan Kalujay and the daughter of a priest, Nadejda Smirnitsky, the gendarmes discovered a large collection of Government seals and many official pass-blanks. Here was a Nihilist pass-bureau. In another house, where two women were arrested, there was a printing-press with fresh copies of "The Will of the People."

It took only seven days for the Czar's court to try and condemn seventeen prisoners to the gibbet and the Siberian mines. The accused persons were not allowed to speak. Only Bogdanovitch, an artillery officer, the famous cheese dealer in Little Garden street, managed to make a short speech, with long, forced intervals.

"We are few," he said, "and you are many; but we are right and you are wrong, and so you will have to yield to us. We are children of the people and you are oppressors of the people, and so in the end we shall be supported and you will be overthrown. Though we die we have bright hopes. Though you live you are haunted by a horrible specter. Our Government is republican, and it has a glorious future. Your Government is despotic, and its future is only ignoble death. Long live the Russian republic!"

Habits of Dude Society.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Always remember that the clothes make the man. Therefore, look every new acquaintance over from head to feet before allowing yourself to drop into the "old boy" "dear fellow," familiarity sort of thing.

Be on the alert to know just when to cut an old friend. Many a man's career in life has been ruined by his sticking to an old friend in hard luck.

Never brag, but hint casually that you were constituted for great things, but always considered ambition and such rubbish a bore.

At the same time give your friends to understand that you could be familiar with cabinet affairs, the President or any of those political fellows if you thought it worth your while.

Never address a man as Mr. So and So, and if you are speaking of a great swell do not forget to bring in his Christian name, as, for instance, Billy Astor, Chet Arthur and the like. All the swells in England call each other by their Christian names. Holding to the same rule you must never say the Prince of Wales, but mention the heir to the English throne in an off-hand way as Wales. This may possibly lead some who do not know you very well to imagine that you have mingled in the "Prince's set" which is the crowning glory of every true dude, whether English or American.

Assume a condescending manner in your intercourse with women and lead them to believe that you are "a man's man," and consider it more or less of a bore to be entertained by the weaker sex. Every dude knows that's the way all the club men in London behave.

Never pay for a carriage or tickets when a lady invites you to attend the theater or a party. She should be only too happy to foot the bills for the privilege of having a full-blooded dude for her escort.

Always pay a gambling debt inside of three days. That is the time allowed by the code of honor. As the code of honor does not apply to tailors, or other vulgar tradespeople, it is not necessary to pay the latter inside of three years, or a lifetime.

Be ever ready to lend a fellow dude the last dollar you have in your pocket, but never go above that amount. Never ask him to return the dollar, but when he is flush you can casually borrow your dollar back again, with three or four more added by way of interest.

Read none but English papers, and in speaking of them say the Saturday, the Gazette, the Thunderer and so on. This will help to confirm the world's belief in your familiarity with life at the West End of London.

Never go into business, even if you come down to pawning the clothes on your back. The dude who once shows the slightest inclination to be of any use in the world is lost. If there is nothing else left for you to hang up, hang yourself. The true dude dies, but never works.

STARTLING HOSIERY.

Embroidered Bugs on Slim Ankles and Flowers Blushing Unseen.

From the New York Telegram.

Of late every department of dress gleams with startling innovations, particularly in color, expression and exaggerated designs. Doubtless the majority of these extremely emphasized modes can trace their origin to æsthetic delusions. But all sorts of departures, however brazen, have their admirers, and what is fashionable is generally accepted. In a short time it gains the favor of conservative minds, no matter how saucy-looking the style may chance to be. Perhaps the most ridiculous innovation in fashionable clothing will be found in the recently imported fine hosiery. The artistic and the oddly beautiful are brought out in a variety of designs, some of which are amazingly elaborate. One can't help wondering why that which is so completely hidden should be so costly and rich. However, instep decorations are to be seen now and then when dainty low slippers are worn, but there are other portions of the hose exquisitely decorated. Few shoppers are privileged to see these expensive and beautiful stockings, since they are only sold by princely merchants, and are never held up to view in plate glass show windows as the more ordinary kinds are.

ZOOLOGICAL HOSE.

The timid little lady who actually screams when a mouse runs toward her can yet wear hose adorned with little bugs chasing each other over the instep, up the ankle and still racing one after the other. She smiles at the unique design so true to nature. Another odd pattern has crawling over the instep a striped snake. Who but a reveler in nightmares would conceive the idea of sending little imps dancing over silk hose? It may be all very well for a "great big, awful man" to carry handkerchiefs with borders embellished with puny devils. But this is no argument for embroidering a girl's hose with illustrations from Dante's "Inferno." The caprices of fashion in stocking decorations admit of a marvelous display of color brilliancy. For instance, the metallic hues are vividly presented in the design showing a flock of pea fowls fluttering over the foot and flying to the gartered top. Green lizards, copied from life, form a very gay pattern for the new style of hose embroidery. There are insect designs, showing bees, Brazilian bugs, beetles, grab worms and all sorts of caterpillars. One can hardly imagine all these hideous things coming in a box of silk hose, to be admired and almost petted.

STARTLING PRICES.

They cost a great price, not less than $12 per pair, and from these figures the rates run all the way up to $30 and $35 per pair. The silk hose, with insteps of genuine lace, are exceedingly pretty, yet this really artistic made article is not a general favorite, since any sort of openwork effect increases the apparent size of the foot. The "clocks" that have so long adorned the sides of rich hose are discarded, because they wear off too soon and the embroidery gets frayed by walking and becomes shabby long before the hose show any wear. Among the odd designs in weaving are the motley colored stockings; one-half from the toe to the top is perhaps blue, and the other half is pink; or half green, the other half scarlet, etc. The effect is very startling, and particularly when worn with very low slippers; two feet have at first glance all the appearance of four. One very singular pattern has the insteps in different colors, with tops of like dye. There is something suggestive of prison garb in this freak of fashion. A very lovely design gives a bunch of flowers wrought in colored flosses, directly in the center of the instep; encircling the ankle in a wreath of forget-me-nots, and above run pretty vines with now and then a humming bird. Another attractive design has the entire hose dotted with bursting moss rose buds; the background is in deep metallic blue, and the embroidery is wrought in natural colors. The list of gorgeous colors in silk hosiery is very large, embracing all the rich shades given in expensive dress fabrics.

"WE MAKE THEM OURSELVES."

Art decorations made at home have increased immensely during the past year, and have reached such a magnitude that it is almost impossible to enumerate all the charming things made by ladies and girls during their leisure hours. Among these none of the pretty articles are of more importance than silk hose knitted by jeweled fingers. This very interesting industry is rapidly gaining favor, and manufacturers of silk thread have brought out knitting silks of all shades, from the deep rich dyes to the delicate gaslight tints. Knitting is a pleasing watering-place occupation for those ladies who dislike to idle away so much time while rusticating.

MEN GOING IN FOR COLOR.

Of late there has been displayed considerable color in gentlemen's toilets, a change that has long been expected and one that will doubtless make bolder advances until the "lords of creation" of the present generation adopt the finery of velvet coats, knee breeches, silk long hose, silver buckle shoes, cocked hat, ruffled shirt front, etc., of the last century. At all events, silk half-hose are now fashionable, and elaborately embroidered "clocks," with a motley array of fancy patterns, are introduced. There are silk half-hose of orange, scarlet, Nile green, royal purple, creamy white, mashed strawberry, azure blue, etc.

"CHARTER OAK A. B. C" is a very handsome book just issued by the manufacturers of the "Charter Oak" stoves, and it is after the style of nursery books, giving a rhyme for each letter in the alphabet, singing the praise of the "Charter Oak" stoves. It also contains some valuable cooking recipes. The cover is a very neatly executed piece of work, and is printed in bright colors. A copy will be mailed to any address on receipt of one three-cent stamp. Address the Excelsior Manufacturing Company, St. Louis.

The Monster Prison of Europe.

From the London Daily News.

The largest prison in Europe is the House of Detention, which has just been completed at Berlin. This enormous edifice comprises six separate buildings, to which have been transferred all the prisoners awaiting trial who have hitherto been confined in the various prisons of Berlin. The prison for men consists of a ground floor and four other stories, with 732 separate cells, dormitories for 195 prisoners, besides forty rooms for turnkeys and sleeping accommodations for 118 attendants. Each of the 732 cells has a window ten feet high. There are six cells in the basement for prisoners who are refractory to discipline, and in the basement are also to be found the kitchens, the bath-rooms and the heating apparatus of the prison. The interior part of the prison is constructed of iron, and is so built that all the corridors look out upon a central hall which commands a view of every cell. The prison for men, which is separated from the rest of the building by a wall sixteen feet high, also contains a chapel and four large exercise grounds. The prison for women contains only 110 cells and fifteen large dormitories, the latter of which are divided into sections, each containing a bed, which can be locked up every night after its occupant has retired to rest.

He left an estate consisting of a due bill for $500 and $24 85 for wages due him from Wabash and St. Louis Railway Company (both collected). There will be a balance due said estate at a final settlement thereof, to be made in June next, of about four hundred dollars, less cost of advertising for heirs. If this money is not claimed by the heirs before June, 1884, it will be paid into the State Treasury.

WHY insure against fire and not accidents? Is your dwelling or warehouse more valuable than yourself? Are they more likely to be burned than an accident to happen to your person? Statistics say not. Since the low rates for accident insurance offered by THE UNITED STATES MUTUAL ACCIDENT ASSOCIATION, 320 and 322 Broadway, New York, is it wise and prudent to be without it? The membership fee is $4. Twelve dollars per annum will carry a $5,000 policy, with $25 weekly indemnity, or twice that amount of insurance at proportionate rates.

CHERUB'S COLUMN.

Some Gossipy Reflections on the Close of the Theatrical Season.

Actors and Actresses Taking their Flight Across the Waters—A Bad Play by a Poor Playwright—The Summer Season at Hand—Amusement Notes.

The theatrical year is in articulo mortis, which is a recondite and awe-inspiring way of stating the plain fact that the play-shops are putting up their shutters for the summer The Olympic and Grand Opera-house close their doors to-night, but the People's and Pope's will make an effort to keep the pulse of pleasure beating a week or two longer.

As far as I can gather from the statements of managers this season has been eminently satisfactory in a financial sense—not so much so, perhaps, as the season before this, but sufficiently so to cause the managerial heart to beat joyously.

The profits of individual managers are placed by themselves at from $20,000 to $40,000. The element of exaggeration, however, is the largest ingredient of a theatrical man's language. Hence, it may be well to cut close in pruning the fictions with which these statements are trimmed.

Artistically, the season has not amounted to a hill of beans. I do not think it has produced a single new feature worthy of preservation, while it has made all the plainer the fact that many of the old so-called attractions should have gone long ago.

The public are growing tired of bad acting in poor plays, and for the past ten months they have very generally manifested their disposition to let hamfatters expend their energy on the orchestra, the chairs and other articles, that were fastened down and couldn't get away.

There have been new plays and new players, but none with the probable exception in the latter class of Minnie Maddern, who promises well in the soubrette line, that are worth seeing or hearing of again.

Lawrence Barrett's "Francesco de Rimini," was a generous and scholarly effect on the part of an old favorite to present himself in a new dress, and the partial success of the undertaking will be found encouraging by those who are continually howling for something new and modern from the actors who fill the field of tragedy.

The principal stars have been putting money in bank all season, particularly those of the tragic and melodramatic schools, Comedians have done fairly. The musical curiosities have not been as fortunate as in preceding years, and the variety "artists" have reaped a glorious harvest.

Where do all bad actors go? I don't mean at the close of life, but at the end of their season.

They go to Europe. The hegira has already set in towards the Land of Dynamite, blood-and-thunder and cocknevism.

The sea is filled now with the bark of hundreds of scene-eating heroes and weak-eyed and tender-hearted stage heroines, seeking the home of the drama in the hope, probably, that they may be able to claim kinship with somebody or something in or around the place.

Few actors or actresses of any note will be content with remaining on this side of the water during the summer, and it is simply surprising to know the number of cheap and insignificant American performers who are going over to try to fill the island with their art.

Minnie Palmer, probably as poor a soubrette as our stage tolerates, will endeavor, under the officious management of John R. Rogers, to impress the Britishers with the microscopic beauties of "My Sweetheart."

Mary Anderson, who has a great deal of personal beauty, and much misdirected dramatic talent, will also act in England during the summer.

And I suppose there will be others. That there are any is a matter American playgoers will draw some satisfaction from, on the principle that people who have themselves suffered like to hear of others in the same fix.

Among the local theatrical people for whom sea-sickness seems to have no terrors, are Manager Charles Pope, now nearer Liverpool than New York, and Manager John W. Norton, who will sail on the 28th.

Mr. Pope goes to make a tour of the continent.

Mr. Norton may not extend his travels beyond Paris. He hopes not only to have a good time, but to find a foreign attraction that will draw money in this country.

Manager Spalding will spend his summer between New York and his home on the Hudson.

Manager Robertson will divide his attention between St. Louis and New York, combining business and pleasure at the latter point.

The past week has presented nothing of any musical merit, and business has been light all around.

The Vokes family, who appear to have lost their charms for the public since the retirement of Rosina, who is married and settled down in England, gave their musico-farcical comedies to small audiences.

Those who are left of the family are as good as they ever were, and there is much pleasure to be had in sitting out one of their performances; but the flavor of this kind of entertainment has been made common in the mouths of the public by the multiplicity of such pieces as "Fun on the Bristol," "The Brook" and other mirthful potpourris of the same kind.

When the Vokeses came here with "Belles of the Kitchen" and Rosina as the bright, smiling feature of the fun-making family, the sensation was a pleasantly new one to the play-going public, and great success attended the efforts of the party. Our own fun-makers of that school have since "knocked them out," and there is very little now except the name that keeps the entertainment at all popular in this country.

The funniest thing of the whole Vokes week at the Olympic was, I think, the blushing and ridiculous attempt made by a tall young gentleman with the chewing-gum name of Leford Arthur to play the part of Capt Blenheim in "Cousin Joe."

Fred. Vokes and his treasurer, who played the part of the captain, had a fight Tuesday night, and the result was the treasurer's withdrawal. Having nobody to take the treasurer's place—on the stage—they must have left the back door open and waited for the wind to blow Leford Arthur in.

Leford is a daisy. He went on Wednesday night, and was a spectacle. His clothes didn't appear to fit him, and, although he waved his hands on a line with the waist band of his pantaloons and smiled above an impressive moustache, he could not get his voice as high as a whisper, and his gestures and grimaces were the only evidences he gave that he was trying to talk at all.

He looked as hopelessly and helplessly idiotic as a small boy hanging by the seat of his trousers from a nail at the top of a high fence. He continued in the part all week. I am really sorry for him—and for those who saw him.

"Our Semmer Boarders" is by Elliott Barnes, actor, author and manager. It drew a few people to the Grand during the week and sent them all away impressed with the fearful and wonderful aptitude some writers have for getting "rot" upon the stage.

I have now seen three of Barnes' plays. "Only a Farmer's Daughter" was, I thought, as bad a dramatic creation as mortal man could be guilty of; but "The Girl That I Love" soon came along and impressed me that I shouldn't have made up my mind about the lowest depths of the drama until I had seen her. Then came "Our Summer Boarders." It bid for the cake and got it.

Barnes called it a comedy, but I think it is the most heart-rending kind of a tragedy, in which the English language and everything else is mangled or torn to shreds in the usual number of acts.

Like all bad plays it is badly acted, the author contributing his share of incapacity to the harrowing spectacle.

Barnes, I understand, has been on the stage ten or twelve years, and was formerly in the stock of the old Philadelphia Museum. If he were in a museum now no great complaint could be urged against him.

He has been writing plays seven or eight years, and what is worse, is still writing them. "The Blue and the Gray" is his latest production. Miss Mary Young, now leading lady of "Our Summer Boarders," will star in this piece next season under the management of Barnes, who will manage all his own plays hereafter.

The public must stand this sort of thing. There is no escape.

Carrie Swain, at the People's, reappeared in "Cad, the Tom-boy" a poor play by Len Grover, and had a fair week.

Miss Swain is a graduate of the variety stage, and is chiefly remarkable for her skill in turning back hand-springs and doing a lively shuffle.

Few people accuse her of any ability to act. She has no emotion, and does not seem to possess any appreciation of the language of the part she plays. Still, gifted with a very good voice, which she uses cleverly, and contributing the music of her feet to the entertainment she pleases a certain class of the public and herself, and her manager declares that she has come to the legitimate stage to stay.

Robert E. Stevens, her manager, to whom she owes the success of her present season, has retired. and a gentleman named Palmer will hereafter look after Miss Swain's interests.

A year ago Carrie and her husband, Fred Swain, were doing an acrobatic song and dance in the variety theaters.

Miss St. Quinten, in "Voudoo Violet" failed to draw anybody to Pope's, this week, and has added to the losses incurred by Manager Dickson, since he took hold of the theater four weeks.

The little lady, who came from England two years ago, has dramatic talent but is out of place in her present surroundings.

She can sing well and is endowed with a good presence for light opera, in which she gained her first popularity in this country.

The summer season will begin Monday, June 4. It is to be hoped the weather will be favorable for the young man with the white hat and tight pantaloons, and that no atmospheric interference with the red tights and blonde wigs of the chorus girls will be noted.

The Cave will then present Ford's Opera Company in "Iolanthe," with Letitia Fritch Maria Bochel, Genevieve Reynolds, W. H. Seymour, Phil Branson, Louis Raymond, Sam Reed and other performers, including a stiring chorus.

The Pickwick will open the same night with Miss St. Quinten, in a new play. She will remain one week and will be followed by the Hess Comic Opera Company, in which are Blanch Chapman, Emma Elsner, Geo. Denham and James Peakes.

Even at the threshhold of the summer season can I look into its leafy depths and see the wreck of hearts and destruction of dudes that its joyful hours will laugh over.

Amusement Notes.

The Vokes' are announced to appear next week at Pope's in an entirely new repertoire.

Carrie Swain plays in Nashville during the prize drill week. R. E. Stevens left for there Thursday night.

The St. Louis Dime Museum, Fourth and Walnut, has Jocko, the orang-outang, the midgets and other curiosities for its patrons this week.

Tony Denier's Pantomime Troupe will appear at the People's to-morrow night and during the rest of the week, in an elaborate version of Humpty Dumpty.

At Sackett's Dime Museum, No. 13 S. Fifth street, a dozen wild Apache Indians from Chief Juh's band, will do peace and war dances, sing medicine songs, and burn a prisoner at the stake next week. Herr Schlamm, the magician, and the Hollywood children will be among the new features.

Miss Madge Hughes, a young St. Louis lady of considerable ability in the dramatic line, appeared in the part of Lucy Kent in "The Moonshiner's Fate," with the Booth Club at the Apollo, Tuesday, and made such a favorable impression that she has since received three offers for next season from first-class managers. She possesses great emotional talent, and has more than once acquitted herself in such heavy and difficult roles as that of Tuesday night.

Mr. E. B. Starkwather will, on Monday night, begin a series of summer night open-air concerts at Uhrig's Cave in conjunction with his interesting entertainment styles "Sketches of the Orient," The sketches are a beautiful and instructive series of realistic views, illustrating scenes of Oriental travel. The pictures are 20x30 feet and are explained in a lecture that is itself a realy pleasing feature. The spectator will be taken from St. Louis to San Francisco and thence to the glorious East, all the splendors of which will be unfolded before him. There is a different programme for each night and the whole is arranged so that anybody taking in the whole series will have the benefit of a voyage around the world at a very insignificant outlay. Richard Maddern's orchestra will furnish the concert music.

Horse-Shoeing.
JOHN M. GOMES,

The cut represents a foot shod for corns, with a side cork at the quarters, and the shoe sprung from the quarter to the heel, so as not to bear on that part of the foot. In extreme cases a bar shoe has to be put on, bearing on the frog. It is an easy matter to keep a horse from going lame with an ordinary corn, but one caused by navicular disease is incurable. I claim to be quite an expert in this branch of the business.
